It is interesting to note that the picture was taken by the Sunlight Arc Corporation under the supervision of Mr. C. G. Nesbit, Sales Manager. Notification was sent to the company on the evening of November 18. Full illuminationn was installed and ready at eleven o'clock Monday morning, November 21. The actual time allowed for taking of the motion pictures and still pictures was 2¼ minutes.

The object of taking this picture was in order that the people of the country might have a definite idea of this gathering through the medium of the motion picture screen.

"Wall Flower" Is New Rupert Hughes Story

Among Goldwyn's big new special pictures to be released early in the new year is Rupert Hughes' original screen story, "The Wall Flower," said by company officials to be in the same vein of comedy-drama of American domestic life so successfully mined by Mr. Hughes in "The Old Nest" "Dangerous Curve Ahead" and "Scratch My Back."

Mr. Hughes, who has kept in close touch with every phase of production of his photoplays has, in the case of "The Wall Flower," assumed the directorial reins in addition to writing the scenario and preparing the continuity.

Colleen Moore, one of the most charming screen personalities recently discovered, was engaged by Goldwyn to play the chief role in "The Wall Flower."

Playing opposite Miss Moore is Richard Dix, Goldwyn's featured leading man usually seen heretofore opposite Helene Chadwick. Others in the cast are Gertrude Astor, Laura Laplante, Tom Gallery, Rush Hughes, son of the author, Dana Todd, Fanny Stockbridge and Emily Rait.

New Series for Universal

To Distribute "Leather Pushers" Two-Reelers of Prize-Ring Stories

UNIVERSAL has acquired a strong addition to its release schedule, by arranging for the exclusive distribution of "The Leather Pushers," a series of twelve two-reelers which immortalize, for the screen, the popular prize ring characters from the pen of H. C. Witwer, one of America's leading humorists. "The Leather Pushers" recently appeared as a series in Collier's Magazine, and was hailed as the best prize ring novel ever written. G. P. Putnam & Sons are publishing the series in book form.

"The Leather Pushers" is being put into screen form by a special company, organized solely for this purpose. It is known as the Knickerbocker Photoplay Corporation, and is headed by H. L. Messmore. Harry Pollard is directing the series, which stars Reginald Denny in the role of the young college man and football star, who seeks his fortune in the prize ring, when his father's finances are swept away in Wall street. H. C. Witwer, himself, is supervising the screening of his stories.

Universal is not ready to announce its plans for the release of "The Leather Pushers" series, but it is understood that every possible effort will be made to put the series over in a way never before attempted with two-reelers. Two of the series already have been completed, and Universal executives who have seen them, unite in asserting that Witwer's series will be one of the most outstanding screen novelties of the coming year.

Ince Special Premiere Early in 1922

"Hail the Woman," the Thomas H. Ince special which will be distributed by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., will have its New York premiere soon after the first of the new year. No definite decision has yet been reached as to the Broadway presentation but it is known that it will play, soon after January 1.

Prints of "Hail the Woman" are now in the exchanges of First National, and a nation-wide exploitation campaign conducted from the

Wells' New Colonial Theatre One of South's Prettiest Houses

With the recent opening of Jake Wells' beautiful new Colonial theatre at Eighth and Broad Streets, Richmond, Va,, this city is now boasting of what is said to be one of the South's prettiest playhouses and a triumph in modern theatre construction, combining both beauty and comfort. Located on the same site was the old Bijou theatre, Jake Wells' first venture into the theatrical business following his success as manager of the Richmond team in the old Atlantic League.

The building covers an area of 30,000 square feet and was erected at a cost of nearly a half million dollars, is constructed of Tavernell Italian marble with inlaid tile floors while the doors are of plate glass with brass trimmings. Leaving the entrance through the colonade and lobby, which is finished in imported Italian marble, wainscoating and ornamental decorations, the visitor is impressed with the classical design of the magnificent foyer and lounging room. The colonade is parallel with Broad Street, off of which is the pretty box office. Adjoining this is a lobby and passing from the lobby one enters the foyer then direct to the auditorium. In the foyer are inclines leading to the upper portion of the building which is of the one-floor type and having a seating capacity of two thousand. The rear portion runs up on such an angle that they pass over the foyer and lobby and at the extreme front of the building, allow enough space in which to place the executive offices of Jake Wells and Harry Bernstein, who is Mr. Wells' resident manager for all the Wells theatres in Richmond.

There are six entrances to the auditorium from the foyer which gives the patrons easy means of ingress and in addition to the above there are six additional exits, making a total of twelve in the entire building. The house can be emptied in three minutes. Every seat has full view of the screen, while the furnishings of the various rest rooms have attracted unusual attention. The auditorium is decidedly Georgian in design and the color scheme blends very artistically. Practically all of the lighting effects are from concealed sources of light and art glass panels, the feature electric display being placed in the main ceiling where the lights change in color as the artist blends his colors. The oval dome represents a beautiful sunburst and receives unstinted praise at every performance. The electrical equipment occupies considerable space at the rear of the stage, the huge switchboard and dimmers requiring a special gallery. There are several sources of current supply. On the front at the top of the building there is a large electric sign bearing the theatre's name.

Ventilation is effected by a combination heating and ventilating system, automatically controlled, which gives the auditorium four changes of air per hour.

The New Colonial's projection room is one of the best in the South, the equipment consisting of two special type "S" motor driven Simplex projectors, with double speed control handles, double motor snap switches, 3,000 foot magazines, asbestos heat shields, shutter shafts, film measuring devices and speed

Monster Portable Power Plant

How's this for a portable power plant? 160 H. P. cylinder Winton marine engine, with a 6½ inch bore and 9 inch stroke; 75 K.W. direct current Westinghouse generator, a direct connected cooling system consisting of a radiator 4½ feet wide by 5 feet high, with a 2 inch centrifugal circulating pump. Complete switchboard governor, gasoline, and oil tank mounted on a 5 ton Fageol truck, altogether weighing 20,000 lbs.

This outfit is said to be one of the most perfect pieces of apparatus in the industry. It will develop 1000 amperes or sufficient electricity to light 4000 25-watt incandescent lamps, and will run constantly without the addition of water. The cooling system pumps water through the engine at the rate of one hundred gallons per minute. The air propellors shoot through the radiator at the rate of thirty thousand cubic feet per minute. The generator can be operated while the truck itself is moving. The truck is a seven speed Fageol, and will navigate on about any kind of grade or travel over any kind of road. The apparatus was first used at Monterey with the von Stroheim company and has been in operation for six months.

Strand, Schenectady, Open

The Strand theatre, Schenectady, N. Y., remodeled from the former Palace and was opened to the public on November 23. The interior decorative effects are of buff, blue, silver and gold, a scheme which has been carried out in every detail, not only in the upholstery and the carpeting but in the wall decorations and the curtains. The ceiling itself being in a combination of gold and buff that is at once restful and at the same time pleasing to the eye. The house has a seating capacity of about 1,500, divided between a main floor of 900 seats and a balcony which will accommodate about 600 persons.

The organ is one manufactured by the Marr and Colton company, equipped with 27 stop controls, the action being electro-pneumatic. The house will also support a large orchestra. —GRANT.

Four New Theatres Being Planned for St. Louis

Announcement is made of the plans for four new theatres in St. Louis, three of which will play vaudeville and pictures and the other first-run pictures only.

The Selznick interests are understood to be behind the project to erect a theatre costing $1,500,000 on the site of the present Midway theatre on Grand avenue, the "White Light" district of St. Louis. It is announced by its manager, Charles Thimmig, that the new building will be fourteen stories in height and will include either a hotel or an office building in addition to the picture theatre.

The Martin Beck circuit announces the purchase of a site in the downtown district for a new theatre costing $1,500,000 and to be known as the "Mississippi." The new theatre will seat 4000 persons and will show Junior Orpheum vaudeville and first-run pictures.

The Shuberts have announced plans for the erection of a million dollar vaudeville and picture theatre in the downtown district, showing Shubert vaudeville and William Fox pictures.

Marcus Loew has completed plans for his new theatre which will seat 4500 persons and which will be erected near the Hotel Statler in the downtown district. In addition to Loew vaudeville, first-run pictures will be shown.

$2,000,000 Orpheum Opens

The Junior Orpheum theatre, costing more than two million dollars, and one of the finest theatres west of Chicago, was opened at Kansas City, Missouri, recently with Martin Beck, president, Mort Singer, general manager, and many Orpheum theatre people in attendance.

The theatre is strictly fire proof and modern in every respect. Among the many features are: a refrigerating system that lowers temperatures 20 degrees in the summer; spacious lobbies so waiting patrons will not be exposed to inclement weather; elevator for sixty to balcony and upper boxes; playground and nursery with attendant for children of patrons; rest rooms and a first aide station; smoking rooms with card tables; washed air and latest ventilation appliances; barrel backed chairs.—NOMX.

Riddle of the Deep to Be Solved by Photography

A Paper Before S.M.P.E. by J. E. Williamson and Carl L. Gregory

PART II

It was the original intention that the first pictures be taken on the Pacific Coast near Southern California, but upon the advice of Dr. Townsend, curator of the N. Y. Aquarium, who has spent the best part of his life in oceangraphic study all over the world, the Bahama Islands were selected as being richest in varied forms of marine life and variegated coral, and the water of unexcelled clearness at Nassau, N. P., was selected as the central point about which the expedition was to work. Nassau is a splendid winter resort with which American tourists are unfortunately but little acquainted.

Not only are the Marine Gardens there more beautiful than any others in this part of the world, but there are many wrecks strewn along the treacherous coral reefs which extend for thousands of square miles among these islands. Here in the old days many a Spanish galleon and treasure ship, many a Spanish conquistadore and many a rich merchant ship came to grief, and in the lagoons and inlets famous pirates found their refuge—Black Beard, Sir Henry Morgan, the infamous Teach, Captain Kidd, and many another notorious freebooter, beached their boats and scraped their hulls, and sought the wood and water.

Here in later days thrive the beach combers—many of them descendants of these old pirates—none the less savage and avaricious in their greed for ill gotten salvage.

In these clear waters the fish attain the most gorgeous colors and the most beautiful and fantastic forms.

In the shipyard at Nassau the Williamson boys had constructed a vessel suitable for the operation of the chamber. In form this vessel was a barge about forty feet long by eighteen wide. In its bottom an opening was cut large enough to lower the chamber through and this opening was built around with heavy timbers to a height of three feet above the water line, making it a well. Chain hoists, capable of lifting eight tons each, were suspended above the well. One of them was made fast to the large end of the cone and the other was used to lift and lower the tube, being attached to the upper flange of the topmost section by a steel yoke. A collar of timber and steel was built across the well. This collar could be fitted close around the upper flange of the top section when it was desired to disengage the yoke and add another section of tube.

The Williamson brothers had charge of the entire outfit—its preparation, construction and operation. They secured Carl L. Gregory, regarded as being one of the most expert photographers in the country, to make the first photographic film ever taken beneath the ocean, and to these three young men is due the wonderful success of the undertaking.

Photographing under water through water is something new. Density and light values had to be studied carefully to avoid improper exposure and faulty focus. Besides, the problem of finding good "locations" was a troublesome one. Prior to starting work with the camera Mr. Gregory and the writer cruised around the waters near Nassau, carefully scanning the bottom through plates of glass inserted in the bottom of their boat. Whenever a spot of unusual beauty was seen it was buoyed. So were the old wrecks that could be discerned resting against the very reefs that destroyed the fine ships they once were. The prettiest stretches of coral reefs were similarly marked and so were several deep caves in the bottom that were the abodes for thousands of brightly colored fish.

With this preparatory work completed the barge, loaded with the chamber and a hundred feet of tube, was taken in tow by a powerboat and actual photographic work began.

The first film was made in the celebrated Marine Gardens at a depth varying from fifteen to twenty-five feet, according to the surface of the bottom. These gardens are in a narrow strait between the eastern end of Hog Island and the western end of Athol Island, and through this strait there is always a very strong current running estimated at about seven knots an hour. It was just the place to give the tube a severe test at the very beginning of the work and the result was eminently satisfactory. By mooring the barge to four anchors across the tide and then slacking the cables on one side and taking in those on the other, it was possible to let it swing with the tide. While it was swinging, Mr. Gregory, down in the chamber, turned the crank of his camera and photographed a panorama of sea bottom, wonderful in the luxuriant growth that makes the Marine Gardens so beautiful and unlike anything that can be found above the surface of the waters. The clearness of the water and the perfect illumination afforded by the sunlight coming through it and striking the white coral bottom was remarkable. In the deep recesses of coral caverns it was not at all unusual to secure perfectly exposed negatives at 1/75 of a second with a lens opening of f6.3.

The barge was named the Jules Verne, in honor of the writer whose imagination saw what the camera has now taken for the whole world to see, and it was a strange coincidence that the power boat that towed it was named the Nautilus. Superstitious ones in the party at once decided it to be a good omen and Colonel Governor Haddon-Smith of the Bahamas was struck by the two names the day he came out to the barge to go down in the tube and take a first look at some of the territory over which he presides. He was amazed by the beauty of the spectacle revealed and would not be contented until Lady Haddon-Smith, who accompanied him, also went down. Captain Haddon-Smith of the English army and his wife, and Colonial Secretary Hart-Bennett also were in the party, and so was American Consul Doty. They all took turns in descending into the chamber and were loathe to leave the beautiful view that was unfolded before their eyes.

In looking down through the water by means of a water-glass the vegetation in the sea gardens is much foreshortened and the greatest height is, seemingly, about three feet. Through the glass of the chamber, however, all of this foreshortening is lost and the beautiful ferns, sea palms and other species of subaqueous growth are seen in the full dignity of their real height. Looking at them from the bottom they wave and sway in the tide to a height of eight or ten feet.

Nearly every one who has toured in tropical waters has seen the native black boys dive for coins. One of the most interesting of the films is that which shows these boys while they are beneath the surface fighting each other for the elusive bit of silver. Sometimes three of them were caught at once struggling to get the piece of money at a depth of twenty-five feet. A very remarkable photograph was taken at a speed of 1/300 of a second and caught one of these divers at the instant his head and shoulders appeared beneath the surface when he was diving.

For the first time in the world photographs were taken of deep sea diver working on a wreck. Near Nassau there is the hulk of an old blockade runner that came to grief while seeking safety in that harbor during the Civil War. She lies at a depth of fifty feet and scattered on the bottom near her are some rust-encrusted cannon and many cannon balls. George Williamson volunteered to be a diver and a suit was borrowed from the Colonial government. Although he had never been beneath the surface in this sort of garb before, Mr. Williamson gamely went down and strolled about the wreck, picking up cannon balls and sending them aloft in a wire basket attached to a line. While he was so engaged Mr. Gregory, safe and dry in the chamber, was photographing him.

Another very interesting film was made to show the entire workings of the sponge industry. The fleet of a hundred or more sponge schooners was filmed at the quay in Nassau. Then the barge was towed out to the sponge bottoms and the chamber lowered where a full view of the sponges could be had. Instead of diving, the spongers use a bucket with a glass bottom, which they look through into the water. When they see a sponge they push down a long pole with two iron hooks on its end, twist the hooks into

Mr. T. F. Cole. President.
Cole Theatre Supply Co. Kansas City Mo.

My Dear Mr. Cole.

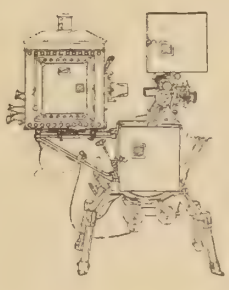
I certainly can not refrain from taking this means of saying a good word for the splendid installation, consisting of two Power Sig B machines equipped with High Intensity Arc Lamps, which you made in the Isis Theatre several months ago.

There is no question but that the projection in this theatre was wonderfully improved by the High Intensity Arc Lamps, which are, in every manner giving excellent satisfaction.

I wish also to commend the excellent results we are obtaining from the use of the Power machines themselves.

The pictures projected show a marked steadiness on the screen.

In fact we feel the equipment and the results therefrom are in keeping with the high standard of quality maintained by the Isis Theatre.



With best wishes I beg to remain,

Yours truly.

Seven Simplexes at Chicago Theatre

It affords us great pleasure this week to have the opportunity of taking our readers on a visit through the medium of these columns, to the wonderful projection room of the new Chicago theatre, Chicago, Ill.

View of projection room of the Balaban and Katz house, showing switchboard

This theatre is an unusual one and represents an investment which is said to be $4,000,000. Messrs. Balaban & Katz are the owners of this new theatre which can truly be called a palace.

The projection room is "spick and span" as you will note from the illustrations which were made from photographs that had not been retouched or arted. It is twenty-five feet in length and ten feet deep and is finished in battleship gray like the three Type "S" Simplex projectors, cinema spotlight, stereopticon and Peerless Arc Controls which adorn the floor of the projection room.

The three Simplex projectors project what is probably one of the largest motion pictures in use by any permanent motion picture theatre today in the United States or Canada. It is twenty-four feet in width and is projected a distance of one hundred and forty-eight feet with direct current through Snaplite lenses onto a flat white screen.

The Simplex projectors in the projection room of the theatre are equipped with double motor speed control handles, film measuring devices, arc reflectors, speed indicators, while under the lamphouse of each there has been installed boxes into which can be placed the discarded ends of hot carbons when making a trim, a "safety first" feature, which is indeed a projection room necessity.

To care for the high standards set by Messrs. Balaban and Katz four other Simplex projectors are installed in other parts of the theatre and are used for pre-reviewing.

The installation of projection equipment was made by the Exhibitors' Supply Company, Inc., of Chicago, Ill., exclusive distributors of Simplex projectors. This concern also equipped some of the other well-known Balaban & Katz theatres located in and around Chicago.

New Dixie Theatre

One of the most recently constructed small up-to-date houses is the New Dixie theatre, at Coalport, Penna., of which Nathan Kaufman is the manager. It is constructed of brick and tile, is two stories high, and is equipped with modern heating and lighting and is scientifically ventilated. The New Dixie will run moving pictures, vaudeville and road shows.

Open Remodeled Majestic

The Majestic theatre at Streator, Ill., a First National Franchise holder, was reopened recently by C. V. Day, owner, and Bradford Brayton, after being completely remodeled. The entrance to the theatre is made attractive by the canopy which spans the sidewalk. The glittering electric sign of a myriad of lights displays the word "Majestic" in the form of a pheasant. Along the canopy are a row of white lights used in displaying the feature attraction. There are about seven hundred seats on the main floor, and patrons can get an uninterrupted view of the screen as the balcony is supported by two large spans of steel, making pillars unnecessary.

The floor of the main floor is of concrete with a special surface treatment. This is carpeted. The roomy balcony has the seats centered so that a clear view of the screen may be had. Another feature attached to the balcony is the fact that on either side runways afford safe emergency exits into the alley, thus in case of danger eliminating possibilities of a jam at the front exits.

The decorating is exceptionally attractive—decorative art was given full sway in tan, old rose and cream. Two double doors open from the foyer into the theatre proper; these are paneled, the indirect lights have globes of old rose and the seat covers are in tan. Another feature of the Majestic was the installation of a pipe organ, this with chimes and harp are concealed behind a screen which carries out the color scheme. The orchestra pit will accommodate thirty musicians. The management is also expanding their chests with just pride over the ventilating system. The air is drawn in from the outside—passes over a network heating pipes and is then forced into the theatre through the use of the pipe system which has openings into the main floor and balconys. The system assures the patrons of the place a constant temperature.

Two latest model Powers have been installed in the projection room. This is thoroughly fire proof and equipped with all the automatic devices to insure safety.

Any film will print a shadow and a highlight—it's the tones in between that give the positive its quality.

EASTMAN POSITIVE FILM

Has the long scale of gradation—the reproductive quality that registers all the delicate halftones of the softest or the most brilliant lightings. It carries quality through to the screen.

Eastman Film, both regular and tinted base, is identifiable throughout its entire length by the words "Eastman" "Kodak" stenciled in the film margin.

Rose Film Tester Eliminates Waste

In these days of outcry against extravagance and waste in the making of motion pictures it is interesting to note that a cameraman, and a member of the American Society of Cinematographers, has made an important contribution to efficiency and conservation by the invention of a developing and fixing device for the purpose of making a test of the film while still in the camera, thereby eliminating the necessity for retakes and checking faulty camera work at the start.

The inventor is Jackson Rose, a cameraman of long and honorable service and high repute in his profession, and his device was brought to perfection in the shop of Charles F. Jones, 923 Cole Avenue, Los Angeles. The device will be demonstrated at an early meeting of the American Society of Cinematographers.

The Rose Film Tester, as it has been labeled by the inventor, is a small receptacle made of machined aluminum that may be easily carried under the arm. It may be attached to any style camera and by its simple and ingenious construction the whole operation of testing the film may be accomplished in less than five minutes.

Fancy the convenience of such a device on location, for night scenes, double exposure work, filter photography, lens testing, etc. It can be operated and loaded in bright sunlight without wasting more than three inches of film. It works automatically; the cameraman simply inserts film and turns the crank.

It is always ready and as much as two feet of film may be tested at one time without a dark room. By retaining one-half of the test and sending the other half to the laboratory with the exposed roll it acts as a guide for proper development of the entire roll. The device may be mounted upon a regulation tripod or set upon any flat object for operation. It is equipped with a case and chemical containers, which act as a measure for the liquid to be used, and the bath may be used over and over again at the will of the operator by merely opening a valve and permitting the liquid to flow back into the containers.

It can be used either with negative or positive films and is micromically adjusted to be used with all styles of camera magazines. Made almost entirely of Bakelite, it is light, accurate and non-corrosive. It is light and liquid tight and may be inverted without leaking. A cutter device enables the operator to cut the film as desired.

The use of such a device might almost be termed negative insurance. It is like having a laboratory constantly with the camera, and why should not the cameraman have a rehearsal with his lights, his camera, his focus, his lenses, his filters, his trick mats, atmospheric conditions, etc., especially when so much responsibility rests with him; when at times he has hundreds of people and expensive sets that are to be photographed, or maybe the company is on location, hundreds of miles away from the studio, and when one slight miscalculation might spoil the scene and necessitate a retake that would probably cost thousands of dollars? When one realizes the responsibility that rests with the cameraman, who has to rely solely upon his experience and judgment to make beautiful pictures, and who sometimes errs in his judgment, it would seem that such a device as the Rose Film Tester would be acclaimed by the cameramen of the world.—The American Cinematographer.

the roots of the sponge and pull it from its bed on the bottom. This process was photographed, both below the water and on the deck of the sponge boat. Then the marketing and trimming of the sponges was filmed on shore.

Many, many feet of film were made of the hundreds of different kinds of fish that abound in the Bahama waters. Some were caught as they swam about in their natural haunts among the coral reefs and others, by means of a baited line were drawn close up to the chamber. Color plates were taken to be used as a guide in coloring the film by hand so that the world may see in their natural tints the fish, the wrecks, the reefs and the marine gardens. Also these plates will afford an authentic record of what was seen on the first step toward robbing the sea of its secrets.

As in all tropical waters the sea around the Bahamas abounds in sharks and a film that has no counterpart in the annals of photography was secured of a battle between two of these monsters. Specimens 18 ft. and 20 ft. long are common and no ordinary sized bait would last long enough for the purpose of photographing them.

After, however, unwinding many miles of British red tape, for the law does not permit an animal to be wantonly killed no matter how incapable of work it may be, a lame horse was secured and put to death by a special agent from the Police Department, at a convenient place on the shore from whence it was towed out to sea, and anchored in the water near the apparatus. The carcass was slashed with a knife so that the blood might flow out on the outgoing tide, and in less than an hour after there were 20 to 25 of these huge fish milling around the bait. They are the natural scavengers of the sea, but some instinct seemed to tell them that the carcass anchored there augured no good for them, but they swam around and around it several at a time and swallowed eagerly huge chunks of meat which were thrown overboard from the barge.

The crew caught half a dozen of these monsters with large hooks attached to chains. After losing several hooks which were used with heavy woven wire, but which snapped between their serrated teeth like pack threads, one of the largest of these freshly hooked monsters was drawn close to the chamber to permit the taking of a good view of his Leviathan struggles. A portion of the hunch of meat which was used for bait still protruded from his jaws and while he struggled thus, another huge shark swam in view and wrested it from his jaws. He swallowed it at one gulp and seemed infuriated that there was no more. He swerved about like an angry bull, swam away for a few feet, then turned and with open jaws darted like an arrow at the fish still imprisoned by the hook. He snatched at one of the huge fins and tore it to shreds in his razor like teeth. The imprisoned animal, which had not struggled much at the hook up to now, became infuriated. Appalled at the danger of the man in the chamber, for should one of these huge animals have struck the glass at full tilt it would certainly have been broken and the operator drowned beneath the deluge of tons of water, the men on deck slackened away on the line and the two huge animals engaged in battle royal, each plunging toward the other with wide opened mouth, tearing one another at every available point, each bite tearing the flesh and streaming blood, and finally despite the hook which still hung tenaciously to his jaws the wounded shark beat off the other one.

All of this is faithfully recorded in the film up to the last moment when the vanquished shark swam bleeding away and the other churned the water into foam, battling with the barbed death in its mouth.

There have been many fish films taken in tanks at aquariums, and from the surface, but the tank has never been built that could stage the spectacle made by those sharks. The ocean is their home, their hunting ground and their battle field, and to photograph them you must go to them in their own domain. Many stories have been written of hand-to-hand conflicts with maneating sharks, but when it comes to finding a native diver who will actually go down armed with nothing but a short knife and engage in a single-handed combat with one of these brutes, it means considerable more effort than an exercise of a fertile imagination with a pencil and paper. Such a man was at last found, and motion pictures made of a naked diver meeting one of these kings of the deep in his own element, and with a long sweeping stroke of his keen knife disemboweling an immense shark who darts toward him with open mouth, escapes the yawning jaws as a matador dodges a bull, and with one swift thrust of quivering steel lands a death stroke in the monster's vitals.

New Motiograph De Luxe Installed in Several Large Chicago Houses

The new Motiograph De Luxe, which was put on the market by the Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company within the last few weeks, has quickly gained recognition from exhibitors of the country as a remarkably fine projector and already is installed in many of America's leading theatres where it is throwing splendidly bright, steady pictures and winning praise of projectionists and patrons alike.

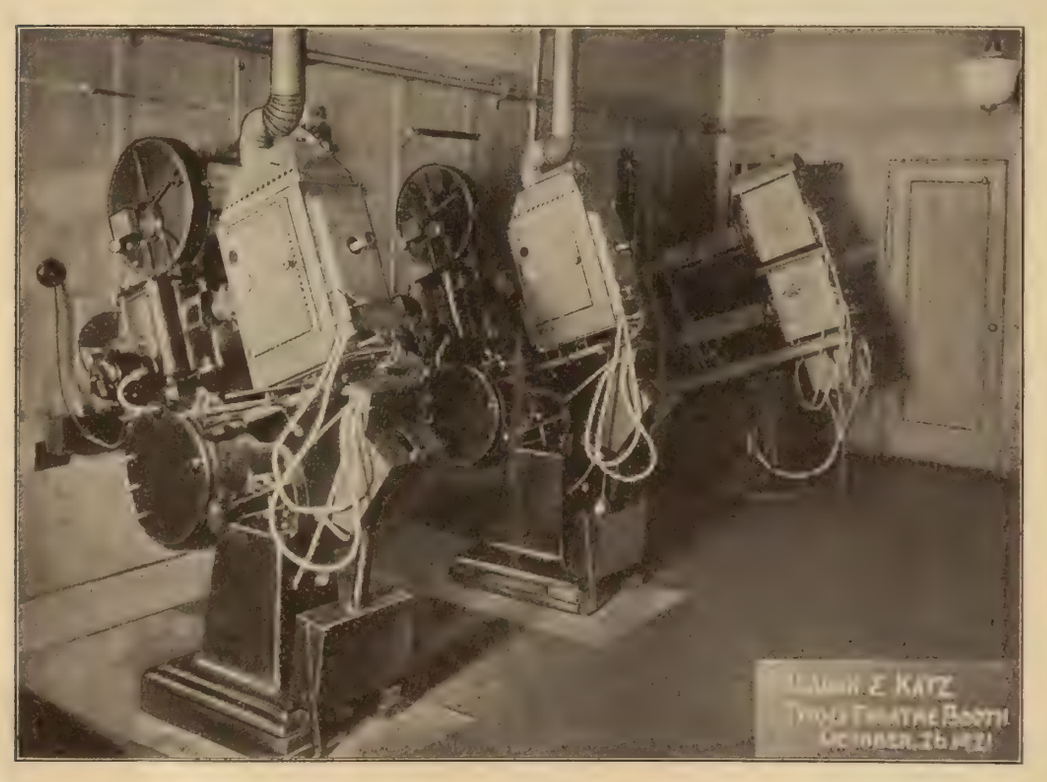
In Chicago, the home of the Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company, batteries of the new Motiograph De Luxe have been installed in Balaban & Katz's magnificent Tivoli; Lubliner & Trinz's big northside house, the Pantheon; Jones, Linick & Schaefer's Orpheum and Lyric; Sig Faller's Bijou Dream and Ascher Brothers' Crown theatre, and a number of other houses are on the list for installations in the near future.

The installation at the Tivoli, which was completed under the personal supervision of Charles Hahn, of the Enterprise Company, gives the new Motiograph De Luxe the severest possible test, and the high praise given the efficiency of the projector and the picture it throws by Messrs. Balaban & Katz is very gratifying to General Manager Spahr and other officials of the Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company.

Projection conditions in this house are the hardest to meet of practically any theatre in the country, as the angle of projection is almost 21°, while the throw is approximately 208 feet. The picture projected is 28 feet wide and in order to get screen efficiency in the balcony, as well as on the main floor and the sides of the house, it was found that a perfectly flat white screen with no reflective properties would have to be used.

Tivoli booth equipment consists of three of the latest type Motiograph De Luxe projectors, each machine being equipped with Dual Speed Controllers, while the mechanisms have especially designed starting clutches to permit mechanisms to come instantly to set speed when thrown into the motors.

Special pilot lights were installed in the Motiograph De Luxe Mechanism, they being located directly behind the film at the aperture plate, to completely light the film to enable threading of the machine in frame without possibility of error. The pilot light works automatically and burns only when mechanism door is open. Focusing device for objective lens is equipped with micrometer adjustment to facilitate cleaning of lenses and refitting them in the mechanism at the point of focus. An attachment is also furnished to enable immediate change of shutters, they also snapping into place without the necessity of resetting.



Mechanisms are also equipped with very ingenious automatic switching devices that operate from automatic shutter governor and control the fading in and changeover of reels, operating in conjunction with a shunted foot switch in the machine pedestal.

Equipments are furnished with special G. E. High Intensity Arc Lamps upon which several changes were made by the Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company to enable lamp to burn at from 90 to 115 amperes. Specially ground condensers and mounts to meet optical conditions had to be furnished.

The current for the arc lamps is furnished by two 300 ampere G. E. Motor Generators that were specially designed and built for this theatre.

The Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company has also installed one of their De Luxe Stereopticon Dissolvers, having a lens carriage that is instantly adjustable for any foci lens, with sets for focusing points. This feature makes it possible to change lenses and bring them into position for perfect focus without the necessity of lining up or trying out on the screen.

In the Grid Room the equipment consists of multiple unit rheostats for amperage adjustment with suitable rheostats for generator voltage adjustment. Projectors are equipped with two step switches, so that arc lamp when first lit can be warmed up on 50 to 60 amperes and then thrown into running amperage of approximately 110 when changeover between reels is ready to be made. Volt and amperemeters are mounted on the switchboard, indicating line voltage to motor of generator, voltage of generator, voltage of arc, amperage of arc, etc.

National Anti-Misframe League Forum

NATIONAL ANTI-MISFRAME LEAGUE PLEDGE

AS motion picture operator who has the interest of his profession at heart and is willing to assist in eliminating some of the evils practised in the operating-room, I promise that I will to the best of my ability return films to the exchange in first-class condition. Furthermore, I will when it becomes necessary remedy all misframes, bad patches, etc., that may be in the film which I receive and in this way co-operate with my brother operators and give greater pleasure to those who make up the motion picture audience by showing films that are free from such defects. I also promise that I will not make punch marks in film, and when film is received by me, with punch holes, I will notify the exchange to that effect so that they may use their efforts to correct this evil.

Lancaster Theatre, Boston, Mass.

Dear Ed.;

Some time ago I became a member of the league and now my two buddies in the projection room are applying for membership. Our slogan is no breaks, no misframes or bad patches that will cause the film to jump. One thing we are proud of and that is that we consider that we have the best projection room in Boston. The three of us will send some articles in for the discussions column soon.

S. Messinger,

Colonial Theatre, Belfast, Maine.

Dear Sir;

In the days when I was a projectionist, I was a member of the N. A. M. L. and tried to live up to my pledge. As I always thought that it was one of the best things of the game I am having my projectionist, E. C. Bagley, send in his application. I am anxious for him to become a member of the league.

W. J. Clifford, Manager.

Glasgow, Ky.

Dear Ed.;

Am dropping a few lines briefly describing my projection room. My room is equipped with two Simplex Type S machines. I use 8½ condensers which are 21 inches from aperture plate; use conpensarcs type A form 4 with AC current. The throw of the picture is 76 ft. to a 11 x 12 gold fibre screen. I am getting a clear and steady picture with my equipment. At any time I will be glad to help any member who is having trouble if I am able and help make the N. A. M. L. projectionists one hundred per cent perfect.

Johnnie G. Butts.

J. G. Butts

Dear Sir:

Seeing the great strides that the N. A. M. L. has taken is very gratifying to an old timer. I was one of the first projectionists to join; your records will show that I am number eight. I am now business manager of this company (Blackstone Theatre Co.) . . . My advance I attribute to the fact that I was interested in my work at all times.

Once in a while it is necessary for me to do some projection work . . . and I never forget the good old N. A. M. L. pledge.

Harold R. Alger,
Rantoul, Ill.

Lethbridge, Alberta, Canada.

Dear Sir:

. . . . the Motion Picture News should be congratulated upon the news and discussions column that is now running . . . with all co-operating, it will be a great help to all of us. As a member of the League I shall supply my share of material for the column. Let's all get together for the betterment of working conditions, equipment, and in fact for the motion picture industry as a whole.

Milton O. Field,
Empress Theatre.

H. K. Greevers' Theatres, Vernon, Tex.

Dear Sir;

I have been a projectionist and would like to join the league . . . . some of the films I have been received have been in bad shape but I have always fixed them and have tried to help the other fellows. If a man learns right how to patch there should be no excuse for misframes. . . . . I think that the league is a great thing. . . .

Leonard Sneed,
Hastings, Mich.

Dear Sir;

Having been forced to work out of doors and give up my job as a projectionist, I have not been in touch with the league for the past year . . . . But I am now going back to my line, and am anxious to hear of what the members are doing. I start in at Battle Creek about the first of the year . . . . I wanted to let you know that I am still on deck and that you will hear from me soon again.

Milwaukee to Have 3,000 Seat Playhouse

Evincing its faith in the future, the Saxe Amusement Enterprises, holder of the First National franchise in Milwaukee, is perfecting plans for the construction of a new theatre in the Cream City, to seat 3,000 and to be one of the largest and most perfectly appointed in the northwest. The name of the proposed addition to the Saxe string of houses has not been determined upon.

The theatre building will be eight stories in height, the upper floors to be devoted to business purposes. The structure will be built in conjunction with Oscar Brachman, and will cost in the neighborhood of $2,000,000. The designs are now being completed by Martin Tullgren & Co., and it is planned to start actual construction early in the spring.

The site of the new house is on the corner of Grand Avenue and Sixth Street, on which a 99 year lease has been obtained. It has more than 31,000 square feet of ground floor space and the building, which will occupy approximately a quarter of a block, will be one of the largest in the city.

The main entrance will be on Grand avenue, with another box office in the Sixth street lobby. Dressing rooms and stage equipment will be built in for vaudeville or grand opera, should occasion demand that the house ever be used for either of these purposes. Particular attention is being paid to the acoustic properties of the theatre. There will be one balcony.

One of the largest arcades in the country will occupy the basement. The plans call for a restaurant, barber shop, pool and billiard rooms, bowling alleys and soda fountain, cigar and fruit stands in the arcade.

indicators. A Simplex spotlight and a Simplex stereoptican complete the equipment.

An American Photo-Player, costing $30,000 has been installed and a twenty-piece orchestra gives concerts both afternoon and evening. The latest improved orchestra chairs are being used.

Carneal & Johnston, architects and engineers, designed the building. J. W. Atkinson was the general contractor, while Claude L. Batkins, plastering and stucco contractor, was responsible for the beautiful cain stone and ornamental work, plastering and stucco.

To Rebuild Albany House

Fred Elliott, owner of the Clinton Square theatre in Albany, N. Y., has just had drawings made by Architect Webber for a 1,200 seat house which he plans to erect. The house, as planned, will be of brick and steel construction with a semi-colonial front. It will occupy the present site of the Clinton Square theatre, which Mr. Elliott has owned for the past seven years. The contemplated house will not be a new one, for it is Mr. Elliott's plan to utilize the present side walls. The new house will be equipped with a balcony and will be most modern in every respect. The present theatre occupies a remodeled church which was built a century or so ago.—GRANT.

Puccini Working On New Opera

Puccini is working on a new opera, called "Turandot." The first act is completed and the work far advanced. Busoni has also composed a musical comedy, a "Turandot," which was performed last spring, a fable called Chinese, which was used by Gozzi, the Italian dramatist, and was introduced to Germany by Schiller. Weber wrote an overture for the play, and there have been many German operas on the subject.

California of Los Angeles Enlarges Orchestra

Managing Director Fred Miller of the California Theatre, Los Angeles, after having given the matter of picture theatre presentation an exhaustive study, decided that people came to the larger houses not only for the picture on pictures but also in a large measure to hear the music, especially the better class of music, presented by artists.

In consequence, Mr. Miller issued instructions to Carli D. Elinor, the talented director of the California orchestra, to augment his organization to fifty pieces and to spare no pains or expense to make it a musical body that would take first place in its field.

Mr. Elinor, whose experience in presenting music in the motion picture theatre is a wide one and whose knowledge of the art of synchronizing the photoplay to music, has been demonstrated if in no other way, by the scores arranged for "The Birth of a Nation," "Ramona," "Hearts of the World," and lately "The Old Nest" scoured the country for instrumental artists.

The result of his search is to be found in the announcement of the engagement at the California of such soloists as Miss Elsa Grosser, concert violinist; Samuel Kalinowsky, violin and cello virtuoso; Jack Genter, trumpeter; Hubert Graf, harpist; Hobart McKenney, clarinet and saxophonist; Vincent de Rubertis, French horn, and Melville Berry, trombone.

How to Get English Opera

In The Saturday Review an argument is made by Francis Toye to the effect that, if English opera is ever to be developed, it must come through the lighter forms of opera. He gives a rapid historical review, from which he concludes that "dramatic music in England, when it has been successful, has always been gay rather than sombre. . . . Any attempt to build up a permanent opera will fail unless we recognize this fact."

He continues with special reference to the Carl Rosa company's performances now given at Covent Garden.

Feature Subjects of Short Length

(Triart Productions — Through Hodkinson Exchanges)

GORGEOUSLY mounted, telling a sweet and simple love story, and capably acted, this makes as wholesome and fascinating a short subject as an exhibitor could want. It is another of the series of two reel subjects inspired by famous paintings. Josef Israels' work, "The Bashful Suitor," hangs in the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York. It is a Dutch pastoral scene. In the foreground are two figures—a fresh, pretty, Holland country girl, and beside her a half-hesitating, rustic swain. From this picture they have made a story; not a very dramatic story, nor a very original one, but one of sufficient interest. And so perfect are the detail, the settings, the acting, that an audience can feel themselves in that fertile land of simple-living lace makers and dairymen. Such heart interest, such a tale of pure emotion, such a romance so enchantingly told, outweighs the punch of the melodrama, the wild action of the thriller.

For refreshment after a diet of melodrama, sex stories, and slapstick, try "The Bashful Suitor." We believe that an audience will welcome such a short subject; that it will win an exhibitor staunch friends among a class of people who are now unfriendly to the screen. For a simple love story, if it can be kept from the pathetic, and free from the gush the sentimentalist, is never old or never wearying.

The picture was directed by Herbert Blache, and the art work was executed by Lejaren Hiller. Mary Brandon and Pierre Grendron play the leading parts.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"A Barnyard Cavalier"

(Christie Comedy-Educational)

SO much is expected when a comedy director satirizes or burlesques a popular play or book or movie, that one is apt to become disappointed if the exaggerations are not as broad as the anticipations. Mack Sennett set the style in this brand of comedy and his ridiculous hokum is remembered months after. It strikes us that the Christies could have obtained more burlesque from "The Three Musketeers," what with the wealth of ideas employed in the story. As it is it is a first rate offering and likely to get over anywhere. There has been a deal of money lavished in the undertaking. Costly sets have been erected and the study given it in making it an exceptional comedy calls for commendable praise. But the burlesque is too faithful.

If one wants to go back into the files of memory it is our opinion that "Falling for Fanny," and "Oh! Buddy," were much funnier —carried more invention and ingenuity. Here Bobby Vernon is a farm-hand who falls asleep. He is reading "The Three Musketeers" as he drops into slumberland, and the ensuing scenes exploit him as a D'Artagnan wielding a vicious sword and cutting up capers according to Hoyle and Dumas. A big set is employed to put the comedy over. Bobby Vernon dashes about and overpowers every opponent. Before the burlesque is introduced, he is up against it because his sweetheart's father does not like him. But as D'Artagnan he has sweet revenge.

We wish that the Christies had employed all the farm paraphernalia—chickens, cows, freak horses, donkeys, pitch-forks and what not in satirizing the plot. It is a painstaking effort however and one calculated to be appreciated because the story is so widely popular. It moves with creditable speed and the company interprets the various roles with plenty of dash and spirit. And one is really carried into the Dumas atmosphere. — Length, 2 Reels. — LAURENCE REID.

"Childhood" and "A Day's Fun at Blackpool"

(Kineto Reviews—One Reel Each—Released Through National Exchanges)

IF particularly desirous of pleasing a juvenile audience, don't overlook the two Kineto Reviews, the sociologic one reel, entitled "Childhood," which depicts a living example of every kind of youngster known, showing them engaged in their favorite pastimes, then illustrating what each child wants to be when grown up, for which fitting costumes have been provided for the individual dream of the young mind. The first would be the "Belle of New York," and wear smart clothes, be entertained and sought after. Another would be a "General" and one lively boy aspires to become a "Jockey." The winner, however, is the manly little fellow who states that he always wants to be a good American.

"A Day's Fun at Blackpool" is another that will appeal especially to the younger folk, as well as amuse the grown ups. It depicts a typical Lancashire family (enacted by English comedians) who decide to spend a day at the great English Amusement Park, "Blackpool." They ride the donkeys, do the Tower, attempt roller skating, try the scenic railway and the "chutes," overlooking no concession on the grounds. At last they return to Liverpool, by boat. Aside from being mirth provoking, the last subject has more or less of educational value.—LILLIAN R. GALE.

"Heart Breakers"

(Star Comedy-Universal)

HERE is a study in a domestic masquerade which carries a flavor of the triangle broadly burlesqued. There is a "heavy" who because of his royal blood is much sought after by the heroine's father. The latter forbids the girl to encourage the hero. And this clever youth immediately adopts the costume or disguise of the fair sex. Such a startling appearance does he make that the girl's parent and the Count MacAroni forget her in their attentions to the gay masquerader. The scene shifts to the beach (as all comedies have a way of doing if they are made near the water) and when the heroine gets a cramp while swimming, the Count refuses to rescue her and the hero loses his toupee in the excitement. He pulls the gag that he saved the girl from "taking the count" and is forgiven for his deception. It's a snappy enough one-reeler. Cliff Bowes, Rex de Rosselli, Florence Gilbert and William Irving furnish their personalities to the triangle or, rather quadrangle.—Length, One Reel.—LAURENCE REID.

"The Heritage of Hate"

(Cyclone Smith Westerns-Universal)

THE latest of the Cyclone Smith series of Westerns featuring Eddie Polo are up to the forerunners in point of spectacular action, there being a full quota of hard riding, shooting, and rescue work to please the patron in search of primitive adventure. Cyclone falls heir to a ranch and inherits a feud with neighboring ranchmen which centers about that tried and true formula—cattle rustling. When Cyclone saves the life of the ranchman's daughter he earns the enmity of the villain who would like to be the favored one. The feud develops with the two ranches sharply divided. Each group accuses the other of being rustlers. The girl is torn between love for Cyclone and filial devotion. But her parent revives after a shooting scene to clear the picturesque cowboy. Are the rustlers corraled? Well Cyclone has never been known to fail. The action is crisp, and Eddie Polo adds color to the role of the hero. —Length, 2 Reels.—LAURENCE REID.

"Teddy's Goat"

(Century Comedy)

A NOVEL little picture with Teddy, the Dane, and a goat supplying the plot with real humor, makes this Century a snappy number for any house, anywhere. Teddy is a Jack or rather Dane-of-all-trades. It is his duty to awaken his master in time to deliver milk; he must pull the little milk wagon over its route, and to round out a complete life for the day—he must take care of the goat that gives up forty quarts of milk without a prescription. Teddy is constantly on the job. He frustrates the villain's plan to sour the milk with a lemon and changes the bottles before any harm can come to the master. Teddy, furthermore, saves the goat from being kidnapped—and he is finally commissioned to pull the wagon in which his master and his sweetheart are seated. Teddy's "goat" never strays. He does everything asked of him without a grunt or bark or complaint. This comedy will certainly please the younger set.—Length, 2 Reels.—LAURENCE REID.

"A Family Affair"

(Century Comedy)

THIS is one of the light, domestic comedies which revolves around the trials and troubles of courtship. Incidental to the business of getting married and living scrappily ever after, Charles Dorety and Louise Lorraine are engaged on a flivver jaunt. Charlie has invited Louise along, never dreaming that she would invite the family. But the girl has asked dad, and dad asks mother, and mother invites grandpa and grandma, and they in turn invite the children. Teddy, the dog is not invited, but he follows along just the same.

In their effort to dodge the household the lovers take refuge on a yacht, but are surprised to find the family pests are there ahead of them—the yacht being the property of a friend of the family. It is later that Charlie overpowers a dangerous wrestler and wins the girl. This is a pleasing enough comedy—quite up to the Century standard and snappy enough to excite favorable comment. — LAURENCE REID.

"DON'T TELL EVERYTHING"

(Paramount)

A Live Little Story Built to Suit Three Stars

"DON'T TELL EVERYTHING," would have been a success even if the Reid-Swanson-Dexter combination were lacking. It has not the theme one might expect from its title, and it may be branded as improbable because of some sudden twists in its development, but its individual incidents ride along with a goodly amount of humor, its stars are afforded the type of roles which suits them best, and therefore impress most favorably, and the titles talk in a piquant strain, philosophizing of love and satirizing the lovers. Added to this is a bit of spice in the ending.

The love story is of the triangle variety but it is never heavy drama. A wealthy, sporting young man (Wallace Reid) chooses for his bride a dainty, one hundred per cent feminine girl (Gloria Swanson), who loathes the sports her sweetheart adores. The third party is a "pally" sort of girl (Dorothy Cummings) who fishes, rides, hunts, and golfs most proficiently.. Elliott Dexter plays a steady old bachelor who tries to guide the couple to happiness and steers off the other girl from the man-hunt.

This romance is developed with polo and golf scenes which give Reid an opportunity to qualify as the most versatile exponent of American sports on the screen. He need only round out his career in a tennis picture. There is comedy here when the lover tries to lie out of many of his past flirtations. The two are married secretly, and the young husband wants to spend the honeymoon at the hunting lodge of the other girl. The bride refuses, a quarrel follows, and the husband goes along to the lodge. Perhaps we lose a little sympathy for the man since he prefers his sports to his bride. It is a weak spot in the story. At the hunting lodge, the "pally" girl tries her methods of vamping. Then the bride suddenly arrives on the scene to continue the battle, and the climax is not of great strength. The two schools of feminine attraction are pitted against one another. And sex appeal wins over the good chum. The story has therefore little to do with a man's past, but is simply the history of a man-hunt with satirical touches here and there which liven it considerably. Wallace Reid and Gloria Swanson will satisfy perfectly all their admirers. Elliott Dexter's role is convincingly handled by him. Dorothy Cummings has been well cast for the important part she plays. There are attractive sets, especially in the hunting lodge, and the polo scenes are unusual.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

As its feature attraction on ———— the ———— theatre announces the new Paramount picture, "Don't Tell Everything," which includes in its cast three of the most popular names in filmdom. They are Wallace Reid, star of numerous fascinating comedy dramas, and idol of thousands of picture fans; Gloria Swanson, the appealing beauty who won so many admirers in "Why Change Your Wife?" and other features, and Elliott Dexter, who has been leading man in Paramount pictures for years.

"Don't Tell Everything" was written especially for this notable trio by Lorna Moon, and is a sparkling comedy and a fascinating satire on engaged couples. It tells of the love that is in the hearts of a young wealthy sporting man; a dainty, fragile society girl, and a pally sort of girl, an expert with rod, gun, and on horseback. When this last girl sees her old "pal" won by another, she discovers how dear he has become to her. So she tries to win him back, and the story that follows is one of great interest and rollicking comedy. The scene shifts from polo field to a hunting lodge in the mountains, and furnishes a delightful background for the action.

The picture was directed by Sam Wood, who created a number of Wallace Reid features and also "The Great Moment," starring Gloria Swanson. None of the three stars has shone to greater advantage than in this sparkling comedy. "Don't Tell Everything" will remain as the feature at the ———— theatre for ———— days.

PROGRAM READER

Which kind of a girl do you suppose the sporting man would prefer—the dainty, fragile, entirely feminine sort; or the pally, rough-and-ready kind of girl who is as proficient with the gun and rod and as clever on horseback as he? Cullen Dale had his choice and he picked the society girl. But his old pal was not to be defeated. And so the trouble arose. In "Don't Tell Everything" which will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre on ————, Wallace Reid, Gloria Swanson and Elliott Dexter share the honors. It is a delightful comedy, and a keen satire on engaged couples. It was written especially for this trio by Lorna Moon and directed by Sam Wood, who has been responsible for many previous Wallace Reid and Gloria Swanson pictures. It will remain at the ———— theatre for ———— days beginning ————.

SUGGESTIONS

There is little need to urge any exhibitor to make the most of the trio of stars who appear in this picture. Wallace Reid is the greatest matinee idol of the screen and Gloria Swanson is a favorite among the men for her beauty and among the women for her ability to wear fine clothes. Elliott Dexter, by consistent high class work, has won his own following. Emphasize the fact that these three are in a light comedy which satirizes engaged couples. Use the catchy title for teasers and in all catch lines. And try to start a discussion in the local papers on which kind of girl is preferable, the "pally" sort, or the shy feminine type.

"FOOL'S PARADISE"

(Cecil De Mille-Paramount)

Appealing to the Eye If Not Always Impressive

CECIL B. DE MILLE will either put over a Barnum and Bailey show in his screen documents or pull down the tent and rent out the land for pasture. The director, highly imaginative and ever keen to bewilder the eye with dazzling scenes, has concocted a fascinating picture in "Fool's Paradise," in spite of the fact that his story goes astray while he puts on an after-show. The idea suggested from a popular novel by Leonard Merrick carries all the earmarks of sound story interest. The plot is unusual since it presents a youth losing his eyesight through a woman's playful prank and marrying her thinking her the ideal of his fancy.

Here is rich food for thought and De Mille brings the drama forth in eloquent scenes. The hero's eyesight is slightly impaired, he having served his colors in France. Over there he had met his ideal and he constantly worships her. The scene is El Paso and he is dabbling in oil with fair success. He journeys over into Mexico and wins the admiration of a primitive woman, who chagrined over his failure to respond to her passionate entreaties, gives him a trick cigar to smoke and the result is blindness. Having met the ideal of his dreams in France and El Paso, it is illogical that he should confuse her identity with that of the Mexican girl. There is a rip in the pattern when the passionate senorita, now conscience stricken and married to the youth, suffers herself to have his sight restored and the young man realizes for the first time that she is not the woman of his fancy. He looks around the house searching for the French girl, yet the Mexican girl's voice is the only one he has heard during his blindness. When he upbraids her the story logically ends, though the finale would be unhappy.

However, De Mille becomes the spectacular director again. He takes the spectator on a journey to Siam—and the story starts all over again. His purpose, undoubtedly, is to show the real character of the French girl, who possesses no real womanly virtues whatsoever. These scenes are lavish in the extreme, but they serve no purpose in advancing the story. They merely dazzle the eye. The simple structure of the early sequence is lost in a maze of Oriental trappings. There are some few scenes which merely register an expenditure of money. Still they dazzle by their brilliancy of setting. The crocodiles provide an uncanny touch as they creep forth to devour the unfortunate prince. And the youth of El Paso who has blossomed forth wealthy returns a sadder and wiser man—returns to the Mexican girl whose romance has gone through the crucible.

This after-show is an anti-climax. But it has its box office value. Certainly with such a title and such a cast and such expenditure and a director whose name stands high in film circles—with such a picture the exhibitor should pack his house. There are some highly inventive scenes—one of which shows a fantastic grouping on a magic carpet. The De Mille atmosphere is always suggestive. The production is always artistic. And the acting of Dorothy Dalton, Conrad Nagel, Theodore Kosloff and John Davidson is registered as vital and sincere.—Length, 8 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Fool's Paradise" is the name of the new Cecil B. De Mille picture which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— with a cast comprising such talented players as Mildred Harris, Dorothy Dalton, John Davidson, Conrad Nagel, Theodore Kosloff, Guy Oliver, Julia Faye and others. This eloquent picture which is saturated with marvelous backgrounds and which tells of a story of deep romance and self-sacrifice is one of absorbing appeal. The production in point of direction, setting and acting is far above the average. It presents a succession of surprises, dramatic moments that grow in intensity as they follow one another on the screen.

The story deals with the love of an American soldier for a French dancer who later meets a Mexican girl in a Mexican cantina whose love he spurns. Through blindness which later comes to him because of a silly act on the part of the latter girl, he marries her in his belief she is the French girl. He recovers his sight, annuls the marriage and eventually learns that the French girl is characterless. Thus he returns to the wife who brought him so much pain and happiness.

Ray Turns Farceur in Slender, But Entertaining Story

CHARLIE RAY'S latest is a new departure for him, the bashful and unsophisticated youth being discarded for the time being in favor of a role in which he plays the highbrow nephew of a rich aunt, who chooses to make his way unassisted—for art's sake. He paints in an attic, along with another poor but proud disciple of the masters, Harry Myers, and finally turns out the classic, besides winning the girl of his choice.

Mr. Ray, with the able assistance of Mr. Myers, succeeds in making much of a half dozen comedy situations and fits his personality into a role that has likeable qualities, by stressing bits of business and becoming a farceur of the Harold Lloyd type.

The picture as a whole would stand some judicious cutting in the middle reels, but a good start and a strong finish, for farce comedy, probably will disguise the evident necessity of everplaying some of the gags to make a feature length production.

With so popular a star in so likeable a role, with which an audience is not able to make comparisons, the average Ray fan is going to be satisfied with undenied moments of entertainment and overlook places that have a tendency to drag. The production is better than "Two Minutes to Go," even if it falls short of some of the Ray classics of the past.

Besides Mr. Meyers, Mr. Ray is supported by a good cast that includes Jean Calhoun as the heroine.

The photography is excellent and the detail in staging the artist's studio scenes commendable. The picture is from an original story by Rob Wagner and was directed by Mr. Ray, assisted by Albert Ray.—Length, 6 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

THE CAST

Richard Morgan ..... Charles Ray
Mrs. Morgan, his aunt ..... Florence Oberle
Benny Fielding ..... Harry Myers
Augustus Jonathan Plimpton ..... Tom McGuire
Betty, his daughter ..... Jean Calhoun
Private Detective ..... Robert Grey

Minnie Meadows ..... Ida Schumaker

Story by Rob Wagner. Directed by Charles Ray and assisted by Albert Ray.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Charles Ray, popular juvenile star of the silver sheet, is billed in his latest feature photoplay, "R. S. V. P." for the ———— theatre, beginning ————.

In "R. S. V. P." Mr. Ray plays a poor but highbrow artist who has a hard time making ends meet while he paints his masterpiece. The picture is farce comedy and presents the star in an entirely new character. In his support is a strong cast, among which is Harry Mayers, star of "The Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court," Jean Calhoun a talented blonde beauty and others of equal ability, carefully selected as to types, appear. The picture was directed by Mr. Ray from an original story by Bob Wagner whose Saturday Evening Post yarns have pleased so many people.

"R. S. V. P." is the title of Charlie Ray's latest picture booked for a ———— days' engagement at the ———— theatre beginning ————.

In this production Mr. Ray turns to farce comedy, discarding for the time being the role of the unsophisticated and bashful youth for a highbrow but poor artist who struggles to paint the masterpiece that will make him famous.

In support of the star is a strong cast that includes Harry Meyers, star of "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court," Jean Calhoun, Ida Schumaker and others of equal ability and popularity.

The feature is from an original story by Bob Wagner of Saturday Evening Post fame. It was directed by Charles Ray with the assistance of Albert Ray. The feature is a First National Attraction and is offered as one of the most entertaining pictures of the season.

SUGGESTIONS

Exploit this along the usual Ray lines, giving the star the best of the billing but do not forget Harry Meyers who is popular with film fans and whose work in "A Connecticut Yankee" is well remembered. In your newspaper advertising stress the farce comedy angles giving a general idea of the plot. Use light catchy selling talk and scene stills showing Meyers and Ray in the studio. For a prologue the studio scenes offer suggestions. An artist painting with his model, both vocalists, is being used by Joseph L. Plunkett of the Mark Strand theatre, New York. A lobby display founded on the same idea would be out of the ordinary. Have easels and unfinished pictures about, an artist working on a canvas, etc.

CATCH LINES

Charlie Ray as a high-brow but hungry picture dauber, Harry Meyers ditto, one dress suit for two, an invitation to dine, a girl supposed to be only an artist's model, an irate parent, a rich aunt, all mixed together in proper farce comedy proportions and with sufficient ingenuity to make "R. S. V. P." equal S. R. O. at the box office and B. P. (Picture) O. E. to the fan who likes comedy.

The story of two artists who had rather eat than paint, who owned one dress suit between them, an invitation to dine, R. S. V. P. and a girl who was an artist's model by day and a society bud by night. Mostly fun and foolishness but entertainment with a big "T."

————'s most popular juvenile in a new role, that of a high brow artist who forsakes the home of a doting and rich aunt, to make his own way as an artist. The story is developed in a light comedy vein and is exceedingly entertaining. The star is supported by a strong cast that includes Harry Meyers of "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court" fame. The best story that Mr. Ray has presented in some time.

"THE LOVE CHARM"
(Realart)

Peg O' My Heart Story Carries Interesting Qualities

THIS picture is a variation of the slavey story with the country cousin emerging successful in the love stakes by being old-fashioned. Written by Harvey O'Higgins it details a familiar plot in a conventional manner but still manages to exude a sufficient amount of appeal and charm through the characterization and effective incident. The simple and unaffected cousin is willing to be the drudge. She is even willing to efface herself in the background so that her part relative may have a clear field for the youth's affections. Wanda Hawley can do the old-fashioned stuff to perfection. She makes an appealing figure in her quaint attire. But so much in contrast is she with her jazzy cousin that her appearance and manner make a decided impression with an equally old-fashioned youth.

The heroine, according to the conventions, is satisfactorily demure and she instantly wins sympathy because you are made to feel that she is unjustly persecuted. It is a light story which contains no plot of consequences, but it succeeds in telling its story, with sufficient color and charm. The star, the title, and an old-fashioned heroine make the offering quite up to the Hawley standard. The girl imagines herself more or less in the way. But she knows something about the appeal of romance. She knows that her old-fashioned ways impress the youth simply because she is properly demure and registers the "clinging-ivy" type of femininity. She is a very good little girl, but when she tries to be bad she is certainly not naughty. In her attempt to steal some of her jazzy cousin's thunder, she appears in modern attire and dances on a table. This scene is not convincing because Miss Hawley cannot play the part with real sincerity.

There are a few improbabilities present, but they don't intrude to mar the story interest which certainly is intriguing enough in a modest way. The picture is valueless regarding suspense. But it is safe to say that it will please many screengoers because of the contrasts and the old-fashioned flavor of the characterization. The modern girl is treated in a rather scornful manner—much as the city boy loses out when compared to the country bumpkin. But the public is eager for triumphant virtue as expressed in the simple, unaffected gentry of the open spaces or the by-ways of the homespun world. The humor is well established, and the romance is highly effective in registering charm. It is not a picture of any depth. But it tells its little "Peg O' My Heart" story in straightforward fashion. Mae Busch lends vivacity and pep to the offering in her study of the gay cousin. The settings and photography are good.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

In the role of a shabby poor relation Wanda Hawley will be seen at the ———— theatre next ———— in "The Love Charm." This is an original screen story prepared by Harvey O'Higgins, a well known short story writer. He has taken up the poor relation who makes up her mind that the spoiled young lady of the house in which she toils without thanks shall not have all the beaux and good times.

Miss Hawley shines in this picture. She creates two distinct types. First, as a sweet, old-fashioned girl, she wins a young man's love by forcibly reminding him of the mother he recalled when he was a little boy. Then when she learns that her aunt and cousin are displeased, she promises to alienate his affections in the same way, by making herself typical of something he hates. She accordingly assumes the role of a noisy, "jazzy" young person. Mr. O'Higgins makes use of his skill in laying bare the human soul. The star is excellently supported by Warner Baxter, a newcomer to the screen. "The Love Charm" is a delightful and charming picture.

PROGRAM READER

She was just an old-fashioned girl. She did not believe in jazz. She was content to sew! Yet she wanted to have good times. In fact she was a country cousin—just a poor relation in other words. No one gave her a chance to win the attractive hero. But she picked up a magazine and discovered an article entitled "The Love Charm." It dealt with the idea of winning a man. She put its philosophy to work. And she certainly succeeded in winning him despite all the jazz that surrounded him. If you want to see the neatest kind of modern roping based upon an ancient love charm be sure and see "The Love Charm," which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— with the pretty and talented Wanda Hawley as the star.

SUGGESTIONS

Wanda Hawley is getting over. Make no mistake about that. Her type of pictures are in wide demand. Tell them that the attractive star is coming in her latest romance—one that is quite unusual of plot and incident. Make mention that Harvey O'Higgins is the author and he is acknowledged to be one of the leading fictionists of the day. Use a snappy line of exploitation, featuring catch lines and readers in throwaways. Make your prologue attractive and symbolic of the theme. A group of pretty girls attired in the modern clothes can dance and sing. Then for contrast present an old-fashioned girl dressed in crinolines singing an old-fashioned song. This will put it over. Play it up as a delightful, charming picture of youth and romance.

"TANGLED TRAILS"

(Wm. Steiner Productions-State Rights)

Northwest Mounted Formula Is Fairly Satisfying

THIS photoplay runs true to form. The red-coat who "always gets his man" bobs up here and accomplishes his mission. Neal Hart carries on the task of the intrepid officer of the Canadian Northwest, and the plot takes him on an adventurous journey from the outposts of civilization to Broadway before he is able to say to his superior—"the job is finished." It is an obvious tale, but that is to be expected. To satisfy the customers nowadays the author must inject enough detail, enough variation on an old theme to provide the necessary stamp of approval.

The writer of this story has fulfilled his mission in a fairly creditable fashion. His villain may not be a genuine product of reality, but at least there is enough primitive action revolving around him to get over. It is hardly logical that this villain would be his "own cook and bottle washer." The hunted criminal is usually found working for someone higher up. In this case he operates an office in New York and overseers the job in the Northwest at the same time—the scheme being to fleece the gullible public of fake mining operations. There is not much variation to the chase. The villain is pursued to New York and a hectic fight takes place in his office with the minion of the law. It is a healthy fight, there being a hefty quality of 'give and take' about it. The hero encounters the family of the heroine who has been brought up North by her father, who has run away through some misunderstanding he had with his wife. This note of coincidence does not take away any of the crisp action. The hero loses his man but catches up with him again in a Bowery dive. And some more fistic encounters are presented.

The villain cannot be accepted in any other light than as a crude individual. The mere fact that he selects the Bowery as a "get-together" place is sufficient to indict him as quite below the strata of the usual scheming promoter. He eludes the red-coat again and doubles back on his track. Eventually the officer catches him in the vast spaces and the story is over. It is a simple plot which never varies in a single detail. The hero meets with an accident in the early pursuit and the heroine aids him in his distress. Thus the romance is expressed. The director has staged the story amid appropriate backgrounds—these revealing a wealth of mountainous landscape and considerable snow. Neal Hart gets his man through an ability to overpower him while Violet Palmer makes an appealing heroine. Ed Roseman, as nifty a "heavy" as there is for this type of story, is ever dominant. The exteriors and the punch scenes will doubtless put it over with the state rights exhibitors.—Length 5 Reels.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Directed by Charles E. Bartlett.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A vivid story of the Canadian Northwest with one of the vital figures of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police as the hero—"who always gets his man"—that is "Tangled Trails," which introduces Neal Hart, called America's Pal, to the patrons of the ———— theatre next ————. The star enacts the part of Jack Borden who is assigned to the task of capturing Phil Lawson, a crooked promoter, who is also wanted for murder. The pursuit takes Borden from the Northwest across the border, straight to the financial heart of New York.

In the metropolis the Mounted catches his man only to lose him again. The criminal doubles back on the trail and returns to the wilderness. But Borden catches up with him and succeeds in his quest. There is a pleasant romance attached to the story which balances its dramatic moments. Neal Hart is a rugged figure as the red-coated figure and his support includes the charming Violet Palmer and Ed Roseman who, as the villain, enacts a picturesque part. Charles E. Bartlett wrote and directed the feature.

PROGRAM READER

They always get their man. They never have been known to fail, unless they were killed in the attempt. When "Tangled Trails" comes to the ———— theatre next ———— patrons are going to see America's Pal, Neal Hart, in a vivid story of the Northwest, in which the indomitable red-coat gets his man. He is put to some difficulty in his task—the chase takes up an adventurous flight across the border and straight to the metropolis before he succeeds. The picture unfolds many thrills, fistic battles, and plenty of adventurous action and is enacted against vivid backgrounds of the big outdoors. "Tangled Trails" is an interesting picture well acted and staged. Come and be entertained.

SUGGESTIONS

This is a Northwest Mounted Police story in which the red-coat gets his man. While the formula is an old one and has been used time and again on the screen, it always manages to impress patrons if there is enough action and incident provided. "Tangled Trails" provides all the necessary qualities. It contains picturesque scenery and vivid action. So play up that it is a picture which is certain to entertain. Your lobby can be dressed up to represent a log cabin—that is if you go in for sensational atmosphere. It should not be hard to get the correct uniforms. With this done some figures can represent the Police of the Northwest in song and setting.

See "Tangled Trails." A picture of daring courage. A picture which presents the colorful and adventurous lives of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police.

See America's Pal, Neal Hart in the vivid story, "Tangled Trails," a picture of adventure and action.

Did he get his man? Come and see "Tangled Trails." A picture tense with excitement and thrills.

"AT THE STAGE DOOR"

(Wm. Christy Cabanne-R-C Pictures)

A Delightful, Absorbing Story of Theatrical Life

PERHAPS the chief fault of many past pictures of theatrical life, is that they take the audience through the back door of a show shop and then give them an unsatisfactory and often improbable story of the chorus girl who rises to sudden stardom and national fame. Mr. Cabanne does differently. Not only does he establish the atmosphere of the stage by scenes from inside the theatre, back-stage, and in a theatrical boarding house, but he goes in for characterization. And he avoids the hackneyed situations. There is no cigar-chewing managing offering employment only on one condition. And the small-town girl is not a star in a few months.

"At the Stage Door" has all the piquancy of theatrical life to fascinate the picture public, and it has also wholesome and at times gripping drama, and plenty of human interest touches. The story opens with a child sequence and then follows a small-town romance, fifteen years later. The younger girl steals the sweetheart from her sister and this girl, her dreams shattered by the injustice of it, obtains a position in a New York chorus. She refuses to join in the revels and parties of her companions, and leads an exemplary life. Her only stage door admirer is a comedy character whom she will not even tolerate.. One night when "the gang" are trying to force her into a midnight party, she is forcibly rescued by a wealthy and well-bred bachelor. This friendship develops into a romance which is nearly broken by the man, who, taunted by his friends that "all chorus girls are alike," makes a dishonorable proposal. Then things are straightened out and he is to bring the wedding ring on a certain evening. But his society fiance returns unexpectedly from Europe and his doting mother announces the engagement prematurely. So the chorus girl, utterly broken, is about to give up all her ideals when she is rescued by her lover. This chorus girl character is well developed, and made extremely sympathetic, largely through the work of Lillian (Billy) Dove, an actress with exactly the wistful, appealing expression needed for such a part. Somehow as the story develops we feel for her as her second romance seems to burn into ashes and somehow we understand the despair that grips her heart and makes her ready for any kind of relief.

Each of the cast is well-nigh perfect in his or her part, unless the comedy parts might be considered overdone. And the theatre interior scenes could not have been better done. "At the Stage Door" is a credit to Mr. Cabanne. It rings true to life; it interests, especially toward the end; and it is very well acted.—Length, 6 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

For the feature attraction at the ———— theatre on ———— "At the Stage Door," a tale of little old Broadway, is announced by the management. "At the Stage Door" is described as a vivid, true and original story of a chorus girl in the New York theatrical world. At the same time it is far different and more original than the usual story of the chorus girl who rises to stardom. The story sticks close to life's verities. There is nothing moviesque about it. Instead it is a thoroughly human story, crammed with heart interest, tense drama and sweet romance.

The picture was produced by William Christy Cabanne, who also wrote the story. It has what has been termed the most perfectly balanced cast that has been seen in a picture in considerable time. It includes Lillian Dove, a former Follies beauty, who is seen in the leading role, William Collier, Jr., Huntly Gordon, Miriam Battista, the little favorite of "Humoresque," Vivia Ogden, Billy Quirk and Charles Craig. The story is one of simplicity, yet unusual strength. It presents intimate views of behind-the-scenes life, and of theatrical boarding house life. A great many scenes were filmed in New York theatres.

"At the Stage Door" will be given a ———— days' run at the ———— theatre beginning ————.

PROGRAM READER

Pretty Mary Mathews might have looked the typical New York chorus girl. But she was far different. A dull life and a broken romance in a small town had brought her to the stage. But her life was passed between the theatre and her boarding house. Then for a second time, a great love came into her heart. She welcomed it—she was more woman than artiste. When the man seemed false, she changed. She was on the verge of despairing of rising above her environment. Shattered faith makes such a difference.

"At the Stage Door," which will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre on ————, is a story of New York theatrical life that rings true. It has been produced by William Christy Cabanne as a story of human interest. In the all star cast are such capable players as Lillian Dove, Huntly Gordon, Vivia Ogden, Charles Craig, William Collier, Jr., Elizabeth North, Billy Quirk and little Miriam Battista.

CATCH LINES

A story of New York theatrical life that rings true. Glimpses behind the scenes that convince. A picture of a Broadway show shop that interests every moment. "At the Stage Door" at the ———— theatre on ————.

An all star cast in a clean wholesome picture of the New York theatrical world. A sweet love story of a chorus girl who rose above her environment and her associations.

"PLAYING WITH FIRE"
(Universal)

Brilliant Comedy-Drama—Will Burn 'Em Up

HERE is a screen production incorporating that same brand of humor, heart interest and colorful situations which go to make comedy dramas of the spoken stage Broadway successes, relying upon general appeal. It is light entertainment for the elevated mind, and not over the heads of the less fastidious. If the plot isn't new in its entirety, it is told in the latest style, being modern throughout. Make no mistake, this picture will please a large majority.

Aside from the direction, by Dallas M. Fitzgerald being much above the average, the photography plays an important part in earning success. The cast, without exception, is splendid.

The best way to get an angle on the general merits is a short resume of the happenings:

Gladys Walton, in a life-like characterization of a great hearted, yet semi-illiterate beautiful girl, never loses sight of her identity in the role. She gives a most satisfying performance, as Enid Gregory.

Enid plays the piano in "Melody Shop," a kind of music store, where the principal item of sale is popular music, mostly "jazz." Account of her apt ability at "tickling the ivory," she has an established following, delighting the owner of the shop, and permitting her to indulge in the tawdry finery she craves.

In love with Enid is a true-to-type plumber. His line of talk is second only to that of the "jazz artist," whose keen wit and sharp tongue makes possible the scintillating spoken titles, each a sure-fire laugh. To Enid's boarding house comes a girl of evident breeding, in distress. She is trying to hide from her former set account of her father's supposed misappropriation of funds, and subsequent suicide. The heart of Enid goes out to her. They become friends, the society girl self-supporting as a "song booster" in "Melody Shop." Eventually, together, they splurge, going to a smart resort for two days. There the plumber's sweetheart meets the plumber's doom, a young, attractive man, of fine family, mutual friend of the society girl and her ex-fiance.

A glimpse of life as well bred people live it, teaches the clever pianist that her greatest fault is over-dressing, and that her manner of speech might stand improvement. At the same time, her girl friend learns that her sweetheart has been searching for her, wants her regardless and helps to prove her dead father's innocence. There is a villain, who delivers an affidavit which clears the muddy waters, then makes his exit to Alaska.

The production is marked with decidedly interesting plot development, smooth continuity, terminating in an enjoyable picture from a point of entertainment value, making no attempt at anything more. 5 reels.—Lillian R. Gale.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Playing With Fire," which is scheduled for the feature attraction at the ———— theatre on ———— is a Universal special, starring Gladys Walton. The story is a rapid-action, mirth-provoking comedy-drama of great general appeal. It is about a piano player, who earned her living playing "jazz." You know the type, the kind of girl one finds playing her life away in the 5 & 10 cent store, building up a following all her own. This type, characterized by Miss Walton, is true-to-life. She has absorbed all the ear-marks of the girl who means well, dresses with poor taste, chews gum and longs to be "of society," whose heart is gold, and who gets there by and bye.

PROGRAM READER

The role of Enid Gregory, "jazz artist," in "Playing With Fire," was made-to-order for Gladys Walton, who appears in the Universal Special at this theatre ————. It is said to be the most life-like characterization of Miss Walton's career, yet she has been highly commended for her interpretation of "flapper" roles. The story is one about a girl who plays "jazz" from morning until night, for a living. She does it so well that the Melody Shop becomes a rendezvous for "jazz hounds;" business booms. With the money earned, Enid buys clothes of exaggerated styles, wears cheap jewelry and chews gum. Accidentally coming in contact with a girl of good family and breeding, the comparison gives Enid a "close up" of herself. She endeavors to improve her English, wear more quiet clothes and imitate the better class of girl. In doing so, she wins the heart of an ideal young man, proves her mettle by saving the life of a bad man, a good girl from self-destruction, and setting things right, generally.

CATCH LINE

"Never judge a book by its cover." See "Playing With Fire" and know why. Enid Gregory was a diamond in the rough. On the surface she was hard as flint, but her heart, soft as gold.

"TRAILIN'"
(Fox)

Mix in a Complicated Story Filled With Typical Action

THE TOM MIX followers are certain to be well satisfied with the star's latest opus, which is a slightly different variation of the regulation Western. Since the Fox luminary is doing the unexpected these days in furnishing his audience with more or less novel exploitation of the Western ideas, those who look for the variations will surely find them in "Trailin'." Mix pulls the unexpected here by not making an appearnce until the beginning of the second reel, there being some mystery planted in a prologue. This mystery incidentally keeps the spectator in suspense because it isn't satisfactorily cleared up until the finish.

A subtitle states that, "He looks like a tenderfoot and he talks like a tenderfoot, but he ain't no tenderfoot." Thus you have planted that he is a product of culture though capable of adapting himself to the wild and wooly ways of the West. The plot is quite complicated because the onlooker is compelled to link up the mystery of the prologue with the denoument. The hero has gone West to hunt down the man supposed to have killed his father. The romance is introduced when he meets the girl presiding over the village restaurant. She comes to his rescue when she discovers that the villains are planning to eliminate him. All this action is punctuated with the typical Mix thrills. He is again the superb horseman and he undertakes several stunts which may be catalogued as dangerous escapes and rescues. The story is incoherent at times, due to the mystery planting, but the Mix atmosphere is ever dominant. And the average spectator never tires of seeing it.

The hero is endeavoring to clear up the mystery of his parentage. He escapes from the villains and eventually confronts the man who he believes responsible for his father's death. But this man is his own father and the explanations inform you that the hero, when a child, was kidnapped. There is a vein of crisp action which brings Mix into clear and steady focus as a horseman of the first order. Like the well known cat he seems possessed with nine lives. He performs several dare-devil stunts which take the breath away. In some of these he takes Eva Novak with him. The story is one which will be followed from opening reel to closing scene. It contains a fair sample of humor, a note of heart interest, a touch of pathos and a satisfying romance. The backgrounds are first rate, and the direction of Lynn Reynolds is highly creditable. He has kept the action snappy and snapped it against some splendid exteriors.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

What is called a clever and highly interesting western is Tom Mix's latest picture, "Trailin'," which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— as a feature attraction. The star who has become a favorite because of his skilll in the saddle and his expert knowledge of lariat-throwing and gun-play, has a story which is conceded to be one of his finest contributions. It is packed with exciting moments from opening reel to the finish.

A note of mystery is revealed when a man shows up at an Eastern home and kills the father of the boy in a duel. The son has never known anything concerning his mother, but seeing a picture of Western home he goes forth to investigate. From this point to the conclusion the picture unfolds dramatic complications which are punctuated with plenty of adventure and excitement. The intrigue is cleared up, the identities become known and the picture ends with the culmination of romance. The star is surrounded by a large and capable company.

PROGRAM READER

Who do you think is coming to the ———— theatre next ————? No other than Tom Mix, the Fox star, who has become a universal favorite through his skill in and out of the saddle. It is said that "Trailin'" is the best picture in which he has ever appeared. Certainly it contains all the necessary qualities which have endeared Mix to his followers. It packs a healthy wallop. There is mystery and melodrama—sentiment and romance—and a fine collection of thrills. The star has a large company supporting him—a company including Cecil Van Auker, Carol Holloway, Eva Novak, Bert Sprotte, Sid Jordan, Harry Dunkinson and Al Fremont.

SUGGESTIONS

You know how to put over a Mix picture by this time. Any exploitation scheme you may map out for your house must be centered upon the star and his ability. So play him up big. The title is suggestive of westerns—so emphasize that the star has another winner here. Mention the members of the large and competent cast. Tell that Eva Novak and Carol Holloway are in the cast. Both of these young women have been stars. Describe the picture as a snappy western which contains plenty of melodrama, thrills, mystery, action, suspense and romance—with plenty of photographic appeal to boot.

"RAINBOW"
(Vitagraph)

Alice Calhoun Has Sympathetic Role in Pleasing Little Story

PLACE a wistful personality in an orphan role, surround her with three doting old daddies who will take especial care that she will not come to harm, saturate the story with a pleasant vein of sentiment and romance, and you have a sure-fire pleasing little picture. The heroine will always exact sympathy from any audience through the pathos of her lonely life. But when that same heroine is protected at all hazards by three aged characters, and finds romance in the bargain with a youth who is a model of virtue—you can make up your mind that such sentiment expressed will find a responsive chord everywhere—especially with the Yuletide season upon us.

The story has its limitations, but the director and the star have made the most from the scant material—so that it really seems a better product than an outline of the plot would indicate. It is a snug little picture—well produced and charmingly acted by the star and her capable assistants. Exploited for its heart appeal, with the star featured for her fragrant personality—there should be no complaint that it fails to register as a good box office bet. Such a story carried here is always certain of appreciation in spite of the fact that very little dramatic foundation is exposed. To make the patron's picture diet well balanced a tasty salad should be served along with the melodramatic stews. The story moves along gently like the waters of an old rustic mill. It is stimulating because its theme is based upon kindly sympathy and love.

The girl is attached to the three daddies and is unspoiled even when she comes in contact with the outside world. This Pollyanna touch will ever intrude in song and story and play. The exhibitor knows what he is booking in "Rainbow." He knows he is not getting a spectacular product, but just a simple little slice of sentiment and romance. It is a picture that won't be talked about extensively but its little message will inspire a feeling for old-fashioned romance in the heart of anyone blessed with imagination. The wistful-eyed orphan falls heir to a mine and the three foster-fathers are engaged in working it for her. This mine, incidentally, is under dispute and the facts are established that it rightfully belongs to the son of her father's former partner. She gives up her claim long enough to fight the wealthy girl who is determined to marry him. In the end she posseses the mine by winning the youth. The picture carries a punch scene which introduces a fire and a rescue or two. The types are good and the atmosphere is suggestive of the simple, homespun life.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The attractive Vitagraph star, who since her elevation to stardom has portrayed a variety of characters, will surprise her followers by appearing in the role of a little girl. In this picture written especially for the star, the early scenes show her as a happy short-skirted youngster who develops into a charming girl of society. The picture affords Miss Calhoun an opportunity to rise to emotional heights such as she has never expressed before. The story releases many pleasing twists which revolve around the human interest of home life.

The heroine is brought up by three doting self-appointed daddies. While much of the action takes place around a mine, there is an abundance of society scenes in which the star strives to make it highly entertaining. The heroine's claim to the mine is under dispute. The youth who owns the mine comes to claim it, and after numerous complications the girl finds he is the rightful owner of the property. The three daddies refuse to let her give up her claim. However, she and the youth compromise at the climax by forming a life-long partnership. The picture is prettily told against effective backgrounds and is highly interesting in the varied portrayals of the cast.

PROGRAM READER

The piquant, dainty star, Alice Calhoun—the girl whose fragrant beauty has been flashed in a score of features—the actress who can express sentiment and romance in such appealing form, is coming to the ———— theatre next ———— in "Rainbow," which has been considered by many as her most dramatic picture. The attractive star has flashed a magnetic personality in light romantic roles. Here her talent is called upon to display a depth of emotion. And it must be said that she acquits herself exceptionally well. It is a picture which charms and interests through its vein of drama as well as through its vein of pleasing romance. You will like Alice Calhoun in "Rainbow." Come next ————.

SUGGESTIONS

This Vitagraph star has established a popularity through her ability to express sweet romance and sentiment in her stories. She is well called the girl of a hundred moods—so varying are her expressions. Her stories feature romanc in all its appealing charm. You might tell here that she has a more dramatic role than any in which she has heretofore appeared. Mention that it is a pleasing little romance of an orphaned girl who is placed in many stirring adventures, not the least of which is a thrilling fire. A prologue might feature a vocal number with a single back drop painted in impressionistic fashion representing a rainbow as its scheme.

CATCH LINES

See Alice Calhoun in "Rainbow," a pleasing romance of an adventurous girl who finds happiness through experiencing stirring episodes.

Eileen Percy Has Better Luck With This One

EILEEN PERCY'S dash into the realm of farce-comedy has not been very satisfactory up to her present vehicle. There have been several occasions when she has appeared unsuccessful in trying to achieve something out of nothing. In "Whatever She Wants," the personable Fox star, has a story which, while conventional and familiar in its general outline, furnishes first rate entertainment when the film finally unwinds its spool. The role she assumes here of a rich girl who wants to accomplish something in the business world contrary to the wishes of her fiance is well suited to her personality and to her style of acting.

The introductory scenes do not indicate anything extraordinary in the shape of novelty, plot or characterization. In fact it gets off to a slow start, but soon picks up momentum and reveals before the finish is reached, a snappy vein of farce-comedy which contains good humor, and crisp action. The story develops real farcical speed, and things happen so quickly that one has no time to realize that it is quite exaggerated. The heroine confronts her fiance with the proposition that she should have a business education. She makes such a good impression in his office that he becomes jealous and discharges her. The other employees become unionized in her behalf. If she is compelled to leave, they will also follow. Then follows some good comedy business in which a Mr. Lott invites her out to dinner notwithstanding that he has a wife and six children. Lott's wife makes occasion to reveal some snappy titling and acceptable comedy. The woman demands explanations and receives them. And the heroine begs forgiveness.

The idea is clever enough after it gets started and the director has furnished some surprises in making it snappy when it carries on the surfaces all the earmarks of a story devoid of humor. The scene in the cafe will make more than one married man thing twice, and if he takes his wife along she might gather the hint that her husband is given to fibs when he stays out too long o' nights. Miss Percy makes a good type with her bobbed hair and her manner of registering the impression—"I'm able to take care of myself." This is the star's best bet. And your folks will appreciate it.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A merry little picture is this mix-up of wives and sweethearts entitled "Whatever She Wants," which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— and ———— with Eileen Percy as the star. The Fox comedienne has a vehicle here which furnishes a goodly amount of humor, which crackles along in a farce-comedy fashion and which reveals many deft touches which are certain to be appreciated by sweethearts and married couples.

The dainty star plays the role of a rich society girl who has ambitions to enter the business world. This idea is not encouraged by her fiance, who attempts to have her remain in her own sphere. However, she obtains a position in the youth's office and proceeds to get him jealous by inviting the admiration of her co-workers. To torment him and allow herself some spirit from the occasion she accepts a dinner engagement with a married man who is blessed with six children. The upshot of it is considerable explanation before a reconciliation takes place. The picture is well titled, releases effective comedy and is creditably acted.

PROGRAM READER

If you were a respectable workingman—one of the "white-collar" gentry, and you were engaged to a rich girl, and she wanted to enter the business world, would you object? Suppose that after she found employment in your very office that she started on a flirtatious campaign, and became the recipient of admiring glances, would you object? Suppose in your attempt to have her discharged you found that the entire office force would walk out in sympathy. What would you do? Come and see Eileen Percy in "Whatever She Wants," a sparkling farce-comedy which comes to the ———— theatre next ————. In this picture are revealed several human touches and considerable humor. Come and see the pretty Fox star in her best picture.

SUGGESTIONS

You need have no fear that this picture won't get over with the majority of your crowd. Simply state that it is a merry little mix-up of wives and sweethearts which every spectator will recognize as genuinely real. Tell that it concerns a rich girl who found a peck of trouble when she entered the business world. Start a teaser campaign. Use snappy catch lines. Treat all your copy in a semi-humorous fashion. The title itself can come in handy for some snappy exploitation. Such leaders as "Whatever She Wants Can Be Found Here." This can be worked out very satisfactorily with merchants in advertising Xmas gifts. Bill it as an entertaining farce-comedy which will captivate any kind of audience.

CATCH LINES

The best way to keep your sweetheart's love is to satisfy her every whim. Whatever she wants in the line of entertainment or gifts or ambitions be sure to agree with her. See Eileen Percy in "Whatever She Wants."

See Eileen Percy in "Whatever She Wants," a sparkling little mix-up of wives and sweethearts.

Familiar But Absorbing Picture with Several Thrills

WITH such a virile star as William Russell as an exponent of Western life, it is safe to say that he must have stories which are based upon stirring adventure—which are saturated with such qualities as ruggedness and vitality. "Desert Blossoms" may follow a familiar line of action; it may detail a series of adventures which have been used before, still there is such picturesque appeal about it—such a pleasing sample of physical action that it is certain that most people are going to accept it as first-rate entertainment. Russell may have appeared to better advantage in so far as acquainting the spectators with his versatility is concerned, but he has never appeared in a more pleasing role than that of Steve Brent, the construction engineer, whose object is to rescue young women in distress.

The story is enacted in the big outdoors—with a number of engineering tasks occupying the foreground. One sort of appreciates that the protagonist is a He-MAN because he is in a LIFE-SIZED job. The action doesn't wait in disclosing the scene wherein he rescues his employer's daughter from an excavation blast. The foreground of the action with its dams and bridges indicates a rugged document despite its familiar theme. When the hero rescues the girl, her father is so grateful that the youth is placed in the office and treated as a son. The melodramatic conflict revolves around a weakling brother of the girl, who is placed under Steve's charge. A villain appears to dispose of some faulty cement to the company. The hero condemns it but the brother champions the product through his being under obligations to the villain. Of course the poor cement is exposed when the abutment in which it is used fails.

The hero still extracts sympathy because he shoulders the burden of the brother. He has the secret locked up in his heart. Still working at a disadvantage he obtains employment at another construction plant and is promoted to foreman. The same villain attempts to unload his poor cement, and assert his unwelcome attentions upon the daughter of the new employer at the same time. The hero frustrates him in a scene which carries a stirring thrill. Russell displays his athletic ability in a score of scenes. And when he punishes his enemy it is certain that more than one spectator will feel like shouting—"Atta-boy, give it to 'em!" "Desert Blossoms" is decorated with Helen Ferguson's attractive personality, and others who are conspicuous for their good work are Wilbur Higby, Dulcie Cooper, and Gerald Pring.—Laurence Reid.

"THE BETTER MAN"
(Aywon-State Rights)

Here Is Snowy Baker With Another Good One

SNOWY BAKER made such a favorable impression with his two previous releases, "The Fighting Breed," and "The Shadow of Lightning Ridge," that the picturegoing public is certain to look forward to any document which features him. This versatile artist from the Antipodes is so gifted at horsemanship and gun-play—he is so capable an athlete that the most ordinary story imaginable would appear exceptional with him lending his personality for expression. "The Better Man" may be called a Western because it contains the vital qualities which have characterized this brand of production. It may be fairly obvious and written to present the star in as favorable light as possible, but when all is said and done, it is a picture which is far above the average of the ordinary Western.

Wilfred Lucas, who directed the other features, has caught some of the Baker spirit. He has injected plenty of melodramatic high jinks which keep the spectator at strict attention throughout. Baker will not need to take a back seat for any American star. Blessed with magnetism, possessing a million-dollar smile, and an adaptability for any kind of hazardous work, he is the kind of stuff from which stars—real stars are made. He makes "The Better Man" a document filled with exploits—filled with crisp action and thrills. Made in Australia it offers novel scenery for those who have become accustomed to California backgrounds. You catch the open country and that far-off continent has its share of colorful scenery.

The role assumed by the star is that of a fighting rector. Need more be said? Isn't it safe to say that he will command the utmost sympathy? It is a vital role. Make no mistake about it. The parson is transferred when his attentions to a certain girl becomes too obvious. Her guardian is mismanaging her ranch and she encounters the rector again though identifying him as a coward. This is because he is of the type of hero who will strive to pacify his enemies according to the ethics of his profession. He discovers that the arch-villain is a cattle thief. And here comes the Baker punch. Trick riding, fist fighting, broncho busting and other stunts come before the eye. Through the action is disclosed the star's physical prowess. He saves the girl on two occasions. The finish introduces a genuine thrill—the shot revealing a racing stage coach and an exciting punch when Baker and the girl dive off a high bridge. Lucas also plays the villain and his portrayal is as effective as his direction. Brownie Vernon makes an attractive heroine. The atmosphere is well recorded, there being a fine display of the open country punctuated by clear photography.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

John Harland	Snowy Baker
Muriel Hammond	Brownie Vernon
Martin Giles	Chas. Villiers
Red Jack Braggan	Wilfred Lucas

Directed by Wilfred Lucas.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Better Man" is the latest picture featuring the star of the Antipodes, Snowy Baker, who has demonstrated in previous offerings that he is quite in the same class as Tom Mix and our own representatives of the West who feature horsemanship, expert gun-play and skillful lariat throwing. This Australian all-around man—a man who can lay claim to being an exceptional athlete, possessed with unbounded magnetism, and equipped with dramatic talent—has in "The Better Man," a story which permits him to exercise the full play of his versatility.

The story revolves around a minister who because of his modern ideas is unliked by his congregation. He is transferred, but becoming interested in Muriel Hammond, owner of a neighboring ranch, he elects to protect her at all costs. Muriel is being defrauded out of her property. In Harland's new town, he is threatened by a vicious element if he attempts to hold services. But the minister quietly goes ahead. The girl looks upon him as a coward, because he dismisses the congregation on account of the women, but eventually he triumphs over the vicious enemy, thus proving himself the better man. The picture is packed with thrills and action.

"SHATTERED DREAMS"

Conventional Story of Parisian Underworld

THIS is a conventional story of the Parisian underworld featuring a sculptress who has a restless longing for unconventional romance. While she belongs to the upper strata, there is indication that the author has pointed out the similarity between "the Governor's Lady and Judy O'Grady—that they are sisters under the skin." For contrast some colorful dives are exposed which reveal a group of grisettes playing at an unholy love with treacherous Apaches. The heroine is engaged to a young dandy of little character. But he offers her no stimulating romance. It is when the velvet-coated, tam o'shantered Apache attempts burglary that she feels the first thrill. The gendarmes are after him but she is quick-quitted enough to save him by advising his pursuers that he is her model.

Through the inspiration of the moment the design upon which she is working is rapidly completed. Yet the girl is not sure of herself. She has moments of conscience when she would stay in her own environment. The title writer gives the character of the hero away through a colorful line of speech. He speaks an exceedingly good vocabulary. So one mistrusts that he is not an Apache born and bred, but rather a victim of circumstances—possibly a victim of the war through shell-shock distorting his brain. This conclusion is correct when the final scene discloses him to be a son of the aristocracy. Thus the characterization is conventional. A girl of breeding and refinement who falls in love with derelict in an out-of-the-way place is certain to discover that he is O. K. socially before the final scene.

There is some good atmosphere here—the outstanding feature of the offering. The Apache dive, the social gathering, the studio of the heroine—these settings do much to bolster up the story. There is some effective drama and incident—one or two scenes revealing a punch in a hectic brawl that occurs in the underworld den of iniquity, the other showing the heroine shooting the hero and then registering sorrow over the act. Through the settings, the characterization and the colorful costumes of the figures—one catches the spirit of the story and is able to feel an actual participant, although the plot limitations brings one up short in time to feel that it is quite artificial. Miss du Pont is surrounded by a capable cast. For a neighborhood house the picture makes a fair program offering.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Marie Moselle.....Miss du Pont
Theophile Grusant.....Bertram Grassby
Louis du Bois.....Herbert Heyes

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ———— is "Shattered Dreams," which features Miss du Pont as star. In this colorful story of the Parisian studios, boulevards and underworld, the attractive actress has a role which enables her to show her gift for romantic expression. She plays the part of Marie Moselle, a young girl of the aristocracy, who is searching for romance the while she models in clay. She is disillusioned with her fiance, but fate intervenes and throws her in contact with an Apache from the underworld. He has entered her studio to burglarize it, but she saves him from the pursuing gendarmes by explaining that he is her model. She learns to love him for he expresses manly courage. Ultimately she discovers him to be the son of the aristocracy. It is a romantic story well told, punctuated with enough details of atmosphere and incident to please. Miss du Pont lends a quality to her role and she is capably supported.

PROGRAM READER

Imagine a girl longing for real romance. Imagine her ekeing out a living modeling in clay. Imagine her dissatisfied with her cringing fiance. Then permit her to find the big thrill of her life in the shape of a burglar. Her intuition told her that here was her MATE. She befriended him and saved him from the police. He came from a world much inferior to hers. But he was a man. Eventually she discovered him to be a victim of shell-shock and learned that he was a member of her social sphere. See Miss du Pont, the beautiful Universal star, in her latest picture, entitled "Shattered Dreams." To be shown at the ———— next ————.

SUGGESTIONS

Miss du Pont is a newcomer to the screen. She has made three or four features. It is still a trifle early to discover new personalities. And if you played her up as a new personality you might stimulate interest in her. Make a spread in the lobby of her photographs. Tell that she has a leading role in the big spectacle, "Foolish Wives" soon to be released. Mention that the picture presents an interesting romance, is filled with picturesque characters and is colorful in atmosphere and incident. A prologue might feature Apache dancers dancing the dances of the Latin Quarter in Paris. Costume the act in the correct regalia.

CATCH LINES

Her dreams were shattered by disillusionment. Did she find romance and happiness? See Miss du Pont in "Shattered Dreams."

"SHATTERED"
(Rexfilm)

Stark Tragedy in This German Picture Without Titles

THERE has been a deal of experimenting of late with the elimination of the subtitle. The Germans are the latest to take up the novelty—which was to be expected since they have established several innovations regarding the screen. They have taken a story which is marked for its stark tragedy—which is saturated with gloom and unhappiness—which is a reminder of one of Poe's short stories or a document from the Russian school, and have presented it with characteristic reality. It is not a pleasant story for the mass mind of the picturegoing public. One must simply appreciate the idea that it is offered as a study in realism, and the exhibitor who books it must take into consideration that it carries little box office value because there is little happiness expressed in it.

The noticeable feature of the production is the almost total absence of subtitles. In this respect it is a different picture. It is a novelty in other respects, too. For instance, the characters seldom converse, but rely almost entirely upon pantomime. The impression is conveyed that the drama is told in five days, and the spectator is told the time with the introduction of each reel. The picture will not arouse the comment of "Dr. Caligari" or "The Golem," the other two novelties. Insofar as technical arrangements are concerned it falls short. The continuity is interrupted on several occasions. Day follows night too frequently or vice versa. While the drama is told in five reels you gather the impression that it could be reasonably shortened if the director had not stressed unimportant detail. But in the main he has told his tragedy effectively.

You understand that it is a story of crime, disillusionment and vengeance. You see the four characters, a track-walker, his wife, daughter, and the inspector, involved in a tragedy which swoops over them as if guided by fate. The inspector comes to inspect the records and discovers the daughter scrubbing the stairs. The mother acquainted with the situation attempts to break down the door of the inspector's room, but finds it locked. She smashes it down with an axe. Horrified over the shame of her daughter who has been victimized, she wanders away and perishes in a storm. The track-walker returns and misses his wife, but locates the body and prepares it for burial. The girl pleads with the inspector who is deaf to her entreaties, and she gives violent utterance of her betrayal to her father who chokes the inspector to death. Then he gives himself up to the authorities. Werner Kraus of "Dr. Caligari" fame fulfills the demands of the story in creditable fashion, although his skill at real pantomime is more or less limited. In many ways the picture is unduly graphic. The intense realism will make the offering remembered.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

The Track Daughter.....Werner Kraus
His Wife.....H. Strassman-Witt
His Daughter.....Edith Poska
The Inspector.....P. Otto

Directed by Lupu Pick.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Shattered" is the title of the feature which comes to the ———— next ————. This has been described as a European novelty. In the cast are such talented players as Werner Kraus, who will be remembered for his sterling performance of Dr. Caligari and his portrayal of Robespierre in "All For a Woman." The story is one which carries a deep sombre dramatic note—one which calls for the highest sort of emotional expression.

It concerns the lives of four people, a track walker, his wife, daughter and the inspector—four people who become involved in tragedy which swoops upon them as if guided by fate. It is a story that will be compared to a work of Poe's or to the Russian school of writers. It is a story of love's betrayal, crime, vengeance and conscience. One of the outstanding features of the picture is the absence of subtitles—which gives the drama a well-knit sequence of scenes. The acting is realistic since the stark horror of the story stands out in bold relief. This is made possible by the keen understanding of the plot by the players.

PROGRAM READER

This is a picture which enters the class of exceptional features—not only because of its total absence of titles, but because it tells a dramatic story enacted by the most capable players in Europe. Werner Kraus, famous for his "Dr. Caligari," and his memorable work as "Robespierre" in "All For a Woman," takes a principal part annd gives a noteworthy performance. "Shattered" comes to you as a screen novelty. It unfolds a story which registers everyday life. And it may be called something exceptional in a day when the screen is trying to give its best. So come next ———— and see "Shattered."

SUGGESTIONS

If the foreign product is getting over in your house (provided you have booked the European pictures) then there is no doubt about the reception of this picture. It is a German-made picture, but if you are afraid to mention its source simply describe it as a sensational novelty straight from Europe with Europe's best players in the cast. The public is receptive to the foreign-made pictures. And they should accept this because it is a novelty. It is one of the very few pictures which features an absence of titles. Perhaps Werner Kraus means something to your crowd. He is the principal actor. His performance in "Dr. Caligari" and "All For a Woman" has been commented upon very highly. You might feature him. Bill it as a novelty.

A crisis has been reached at Hull, Quebec, over the division of the amusement tax which is collected from theatre patrons on the new basis of 10 per cent of the value of admission tickets. The Quebec Provincial Government arranged some time ago to hand back 50 per cent of the revenue derived from the various municipalities through the amusement tax, this portion to be used for local charities. The government, however, has withheld this share from Hull, the third largest city in the Province, however, because there is no established charity institution in Hull, cases being sent to a home in Ottawa, the neighboring city. Although the city of Hull pays for the maintenance of these charges, the Quebec Government refuses to hand back the share of the tax to cover the cost on the ground that the charity is not conducted in Hull. The civic authorities are up in arms over the matter and claim that the government is taking advantage of a technicality. In the meantime, the theatre patrons are paying the heavy tax.

Screen Writers Guild Have Large Evening

The first annual event of the Screen Writer's Guild known as "The Writer's Cramp," held on the evening of December 1st stands out as the biggest social event of the West Coast film colony because of the exceptional attendance of the most prominent people of the film industry, members of Los Angeles social and business world and the exceptional program that was given. The spoken title of welcome was given by President Frank E. Woods. There was a pantomimic dance of the royal fandango by Margaret Loomis and a bevy of eight. George Ade was there and gave a fable. Rupert Hughes gave his first silent after dinner speech.

The Denishawn dancers presented an original number and then the hit of the evening was "Lo the Poor Writer," or "A Father's Sin," by Thompson Buchanan, with Theodore Roberts as assistant director, Tully Marshall as the director, Ben Turpin property man and a truly all-star cast presented an every day scene in Anybody's Film Corporation Studio any day in the year. The members of the cast were Sylvia Breamer, Enid Bennett, Bert Lytell, Herbert Rawlinson, Roy Atwell, Lionel Belmore, Mayme Kelso, William H. Crane, Noah Beery, Wanda Hawley and others.

Bert Lytell refereed a four round boxing bout between champion amateurs of Hollywood and San Francisco and there was a battle royal to decide who wrote the first motion picture scenario between Frank Woods, William H. Clifford David Wark Griffith, C. Gardner Sullivan and an unknown unheralded writer. All were in their burnt cork makeups.

The dinner dance committee was composed of Miss Marion Fairfax, chairman; Mrs. Thompson Buchanan, Mrs. Albert Shelby Le Vino, Miss Jeanie MacPherson, Miss June Mathias, Miss Mary H. O'Connor, Mrs. Rob Wayner, Mr. George Foster Platt, and the list of patronesses numbered more than one hundred including practically all of the prominent women of the film industry.

Pathe Names December 25th Releases

PATHE announces for release the week of December 25 an interesting array of short subjects. The title of the "Aesop's Film Fables" offering is "The Wayward Dog," a humorous satire on the methods of the Ku Klux Klan with the setting in Dogland. The Topics of the Day release is No. 139. Both these subjects are ever increasing in popularity, declares the Pathe home office.

"Fireman Save My Child" is the title of the Harold Lloyd one-reel reissue. "The Corner Pocket" is the title of the latest Hal Roach comedy featuring "Snub" Pollard, who is seen in a dual role of a policeman and a crook.

"The Secret of the Flame" is the title of the fourteenth episode of the "Hurricane Hutch," starring Charles Hutchison.

Pathe Review No. 135 contains such subjects as "Luncheon a la Pueblo," showing Hopi squaws preparing dinner in New Mexico; "Eucated Toes," a slow-motion demonstration of football tactics; and "Sunday in Alsace," a Pathecolor presentation.

Coming Christie Comedies Show Variety

An example of the variety that Christie is putting into the comedies he is making for Educational release is seen in four being made or planned at the Christie studios. Dorothy Devore is appearing as a knight in armor. Bobby Vernon is cook and bottle washer in a country town hotel. Viora Daniel is a New York flapper. Neal Burns is a romantic Romeo.

The titles of the four pictures in which these players head the casts are, respectively: "One Stormy Knight," "By Hook or Crook," "'Twas Ever Thus" and "A Rambling Romeo."

Paris Legion Post Sees R-C's French Picture

Members of Paris Post No. 1, the American Legion, were entertained recently by Louis Mercanton, "The Griffith of Europe," at a showing of Mr. Mercanton's picture, "Phroso," based on the novel of the same name by Sir Anthony Hope. The production which has been purchased by R-C Pictures, will be shown soon all over America under the title "Possession."

Commenting on the showing, the Paris Edition of the New York Herald said:

"The picture 'Phroso' (Possession) is the second film illustrating Mr. Mercanton's new method of filming direct from nature and dispensing entirely with studio or artificial lighting, and proved to be a great success. The production is a splendid example of the work of the French film industry and when shown in America should do much to encourage the importation of French films."

Renco Expects to Repeat Past Success

Features that made Renco Film Company's production of "Lavender and Old Lace," released by Hodkinson, one of the most valuable box office attractions of the past summer, may be said to be more strongly emphasized, it is declared, in Hodkinson's forthcoming Renco production "At the Sign of the Jack o' Lantern."

Sentiment as opposed to sex problems for the basis of motion picture stories is gradually receiving the recognition from producers that has long been its due, states Hodkinson. It was the simple charm and sentiment of Myrtle Reed's "Lavender and Old Lace" that made this production one of the outstanding attractions of the past season and earned for it the unqualified admiration of the press of both England and America.

The success of this Myrtle Reed story practically insures the success of "At the Sign of the Jack o' Lantern." The picture lacks sensationalism and there is no sex appeal in it.

First Nat'l Has Rapid Growth in Australia

THE principle of "exhibitor co-operation," which has won for Associated First National Pictures, Inc., its commanding position in the United States, has met with similar response in the Antipodes.

On March 26, 1921, First National Exhibitors of Australia, allied with the American body, began operations, obtaining during the first week the signatures of three per cent of the showmen of Australia to the First National franchise.

Twenty-six weeks later it had enrolled a total of 85 per cent of the exhibitors, including the two largest circuits on that continent, and a large proportion of the remaining 15 per cent was expected to "sign up" within the near future.

At the head of the company acccredited with this momentous achievement is Harry G. Musgrove, one of the pioneers in the film game in Australia and who is thoroughly cognizant of conditions in the industry in the entire world. He is governing director of First National Exhibitors of Australia.

"R.S.V.P." Opens at New York Strand

In its initial showing at the Strand Theatre, New York, Charles Ray's latest First National attraction, "R. S. V. P." proved that the public, wearied of upset world conditions, is particularly receptive to good, clean comedies. The star's newest production in which he is again presented by Arthur S. Kane was well patronized as usual and the Sunday opening found every seat in the Strand occupied, with indications that business would continue excellent throughout the week. The reviews of the New York critics in the Monday morning newspapers bore out this indication by their praise of the star's latest effort in the comedy field. The comic situations of Rob Wagner's script were singled out for mention and the reviewers were particularly pleased that "R. S. V. P." furnished constant opportunity for Mr. Ray to appear before the camera.

Broadside Issued for "Enchantment"

A four-page broadside has been sent to exhibitors by Cosmopolitan productions on "Enchantment." It shows the widespread advertising campaign that marked the pre-release presentation of this latest of Marion Davies' pictures.

The broadside calls attention to the success the picture made on its presentation at the Rivoli theatre, New York, reproduces the beautiful engravings made for the advertisements and contains excerpts from the many favorable press reviews.

Norma Shearer in Eugene O'Brien Cast

Norma Shearer, the talented young ingenue, whose work in leading and featured roles during the past few months, has brought her to the front as a stellar possibility, has been engaged to support Eugene O'Brien, the Selznick star, in "Channing of the North West," his latest screen offering now in process of production under the direction of Ralph Ince.

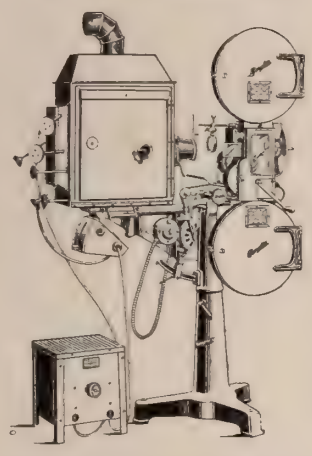
The story, which is from the pen of Edward J. Montagne, will afford Miss Shearer unusual opportunities for the display of her winsome personality and distinctive artistic talents, qualities which have brought her well to the fore in filmland in little more than a year.

Urges Place in Hall of Fame for Vignola

Robert G. Vignola's "Enchantment" has drawn forth from the critics unstinted praise for the director's work. The latest crown to be placed upon Mr. Vignola's head is by Robert E. Sherwood, the famous critic of "Life." In the current issue of "Life" Mr. Sherwood writing at length about Mr. Vignola's work, said "When the Hall of Film Fame is erected, some wall space must be reserved for a tablet in honor of Robert G. Vignola. There will be many occupants of the hall with less legitimate claims to distinction."

Calls "Miss Lulu Bett" Paramount's Best

The early predictions made by Paramount officials that William De Mille's production of Zona Gale's play, "Miss Lulu Bett," would prove one of the finest attractions of the season are strengthened by the following wire received from E. L. Reed, manager of the Strand theatre, Providence, R. I., who saw the picture at the Boston Paramount Exchange.



"The writer has just witnessed a run-off of 'Miss Lulu Bett.' My opinion is that it is the best picture Paramount has released this season so far."

"Miss Lulu Bett' is scheduled for general release January 1.

Manager Gladmer Theatre, Lansing
Pres. Mich. Motion Picture Exhibitors Ass'n

WHEN I started in the theatre business some years ago I discovered, and discovered it quickly, that if I didn't give the public what it wanted I might just as well step out and get myself a job doing something in which I might be useful. I had my lesson early in the game and believe I have profited by it to a considerable extent.

The public today wants 100 per cent entertainment in its motion pictures. It wants a good story, a strong cast, finished direction, and a whole lot of attention to detail. That is why the public wants Paramount pictures. Paramount pictures have all of these qualities and then some. An exhibitor doesn't have to see a Paramount picture to know that. He can judge by the crowds that come into his doors, and the happy, smiling faces that go out. It doesn't make one bit of difference what you or I like in our entertainment, it is what Mr. and Mrs. Public and the little Publics want that count at the box office.

MY PATRONS know when they come into my theatre to see a Paramount production that their full money's worth waits for them. It may be the star that attracts some, it may be the director or the title that attracts others, but all of them know that the familiar sign, "It's a Paramount Picture," is a guarantee, with a red seal on it, that they're going to be pleased with what they see.

First the product, then the national advertising system. Those are the two big reasons why I am showing Paramount pictures, and I believe that every other exhibitor who studies it from that angle will appreciate the path that lies open to him, too. The pictures released by Paramount are made from the standpoint of mass appeal, and the appeal in each of them is gauged by experts. I get the benefit when I show Paramount and do not have to worry over the class of my pictures, simply because they are made for the majority, and the majority in every instance rules.

IF I FEEL that I need assistance in putting over a certain production, I know that I can obtain the full cooperation of an exploitation department and an exchange full of men with good will toward my theatre and me. With all of these factors in mind, is it any wonder that I am showing Paramount pictures, and, further, that I am mighty well satisfied about it?

DON'T TEAR IT OFF!

No. 262—Straight from the Shoulder Talk by Carl Laemmle, President of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company

Ask your operator not to make any change in the main title of our Gladys Walton picture, "Playing With Fire."

We are trying out a new main title plan. Under this new plan, all the preliminary and explanatory matter which generally appears BEFORE THE PICTURE will appear AFTER THE PICTURE.

All producers have been sharply criticized for many months because of the large amount of matter which the audience has to read on a main title before the picture itself appears.

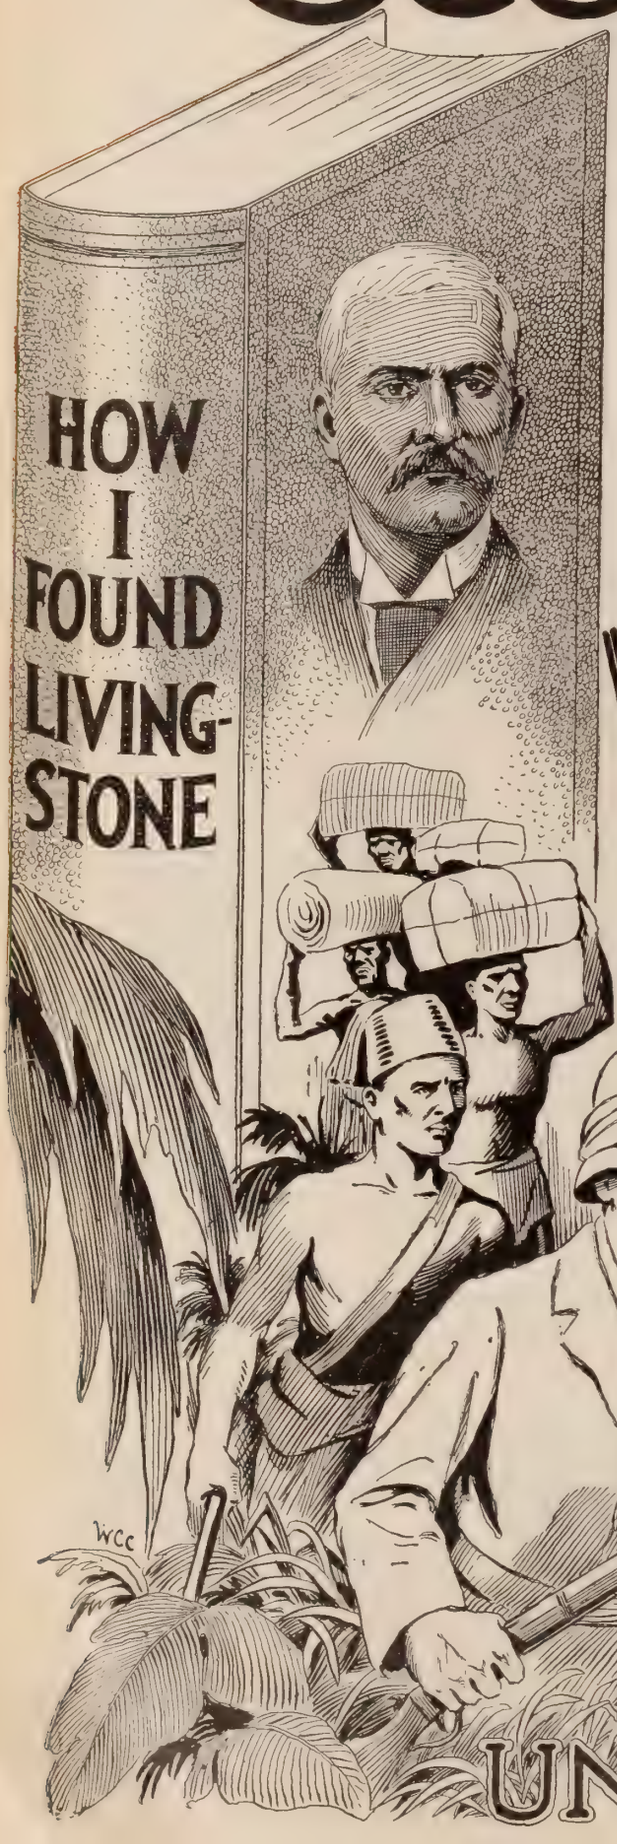
In answer to this criticism, the Universal has exploded a bombshell in the main title problem in the Gladys Walton picture. It has simply "busted up" the old order of things.

We think the public will be pleased with the innovation.

Instead of telling what wig-maker curled the villain's false whiskers, who painted the scenery, who wrote the story, who drew up the continuity, who made the art titles, who directed the picture, who released the picture and who everything-elsed the picture, we start the Gladys Walton picture with a very brief, informal talk about Miss Walton and then jump right into the story.

After the story is ended, we then run the matter mentioned above. Those in the audience who want to know all the details can wait and read it. Those who don't care a rap can walk out.

Your operator may think this was done by mistake. He may want to run it in the old-fashioned form.



Please ask him not to do it, not to change our own arrangement in any manner. Let him read what I have written here and he will instantly appreciate what we are driving at. His complete co-operation is necessary in order to bring about this radical change successfully.

Look at the picture yourself! Nine out of ten companies would charge you extra for a gem like "Playing With Fire." But it goes to Universal customers as one of our regular "Special Attraction Releases"—AT NO EXTRA COST TO YOU!

We're giving our customers a superfine quality of pictures at a live-and-let-live price. WHO ELSE IS DOING AS MUCH?

A New Year's Resolution:

KEEP FAITH—with your audience.

¶ You know and the public knows that all pictures are not the "greatest," the "grandest," the most "stupendous," etc.

¶ When the quality of a picture does not warrant the use of these adjectives, talk about your theatre, its comforts, its service towards civic betterment; talk about yourself.

¶ The unwarranted use of superlatives is destructive of the public's confidence in motion pictures.

SECOND OF THE SUPREME SELZNICK SIX

WHO SAYS IT'S BIG?
THEY SAY IT'S BIG!

A story of characters recognizably real, told against the most impressive backgrounds ever collected from the Canadian Rockies, makes this picture stand out as something really conspicuous.

—Laurence Reid in Motion Picture News.

—Edward Wetzel in Moving Picture World.

If we were an exhibitor we would book "Conceit," give it first-class exploitation and then sit back confidently and watch its effect on patrons. It is a picture which will appeal to nearly everybody for the very good reason that it contains stuff of real appeal and it has been splendidly produced. * * * "Conceit" is an exceptional picture.

—Exhibitors Trade Review.

The story is told with conviction. * * * It is revolutionary. * * * The characters are conservative, believable creatures who act like people. And they look like people, too.

For the series of nine master dramas starring

FRANKLYN FARNUM—FRANCIS FORD—"SHORTY" HAMILTON AL HART—VIRGINIA LEE AND GENEVIEVE BERTE

What the Critic Says—

Clipped from the Exhibitors Herald of November 5.
FRANKLYN FARNUM IN SO THIS IS ARIZONA
(W. M. SMITH PRODUCTIONS)

The first of a series of western pictures being made for the state right market. Good cast and story. Should prove strong box office attraction and satisfy.

There is more action and laughs compressed into six reels than many western productions contain in an entire series. Many remarkable outdoor shots were obtained in Colorado—in a section which apparently had never been caught by a motion picture camera previously.

What stamps the picture as out of the ordinary is the wealth of genuine humor which saturates it. It is not comedy relief. It is an integral part of the plot development. And in addition there is a series of thrills, a display of real horsemanship and one or two free-for-all fights which should bring spectators out of their seats.

Franklyn Farnum in the featured role is compelled to divide honors with Shorty Hamilton, Genevieve Berte, Al Hart and a half dozen other players who contribute greatly to the picture.

If W. M. Smith continues the pace he has set for himself, the state right market is to be enriched by a series of productions which will give new prestige to independent distributors.

Francis Ford is the director.

The Reviewer Says—

"Will you please accept my sincere congratulations on the quality of this production and extend same to Francis Ford for the excellent picture he turned out? I THINK IT IS THE BEST WESTERN COMEDY DRAMA I HAVE EVER WITNESSED or at least as good, and I have been carrying on this line of work for eight years."

New York Times:
There are really some irresistible scenes in "A Connecticut Yankee." The picture has been made on a lavish scale, and, incidentally, it achieves some striking scenic effects.

London Daily Graphic:
All lovers of Mark Twain—and I should advise all who love a good humorous story to do likewise—will be in their element at the Alhambra. For the cinema season there the picture is "A Yankee at the Court of King Arthur." It is a wonderful production worthy of the book.

Los Angeles Express:
Retaining all the satire and subtle humor that made Mark Twain the prince of American humorists, embellished by sets so stupendous as to be almost bewildering.

New York Commercial:
The cleverest picture yet shown in New York. All the dry humor, the quaint charm of the Twain story has been captured for the film. The characters live anew and the result is an exquisite photoplay.

Alan Dale in the New York American:
Certainly a lively picture. Something doing every minute, and something worth doing, too. I never closed an eye—which is a record for me. In fact acute insomnia seized me as I sat through the long film, that didn't seem a bit too long.

Birmingham (Eng.) Mercury
All of you are going to laugh at "A Yankee at the Court of King Arthur," adapted from Mark Twain's famous novel. The scenery and costumes are exceptionally magnificent.

London Pall Mall Globe:
Magnificent production of Mark Twain's masterpiece. All who desire to see kinematography at its very best make a point of seeing this film. It will not matter whether one has read Mark Twain's book or not, the result will be the same—i. e., two hours cram full of interest and mirth.

New York Evening Telegram:
William Fox has outdone himself in the production of the much heralded film. The play is stupendous. Hardened moviegoers paused between laughs last night to applaud willingly and spontaneously. The scenes are marvels.

New York Evening Journal:
The picture is hilariously funny. You begin to grin, then when the gay Yank puts his slang into high, you laugh, and before the picture is much more than half through you are roaring with the rest of the people.

New York Sun:
It has some great big scenes, some very effective ensembles and a couple of thrillers. It has an abundance of clever comedy work. Kept the audience in a merry uproar most of the evening.

Just Name the Kind of Scenario Your Company Requires—and we shall submit it—a complete finished story, ready for you to read and your directors to start work upon.

THE energy and enterprise which producers are applying to the organization of capable companies and the assembling of mechanical apparatus is being duplicated by the Palmer Photoplay Corporation in the selection and preparation of screen stories.

Expertly selected originals—magazine fiction, stage plays, and novels dramatized for the screen—a collection of stories chosen by rare judgment of picture values, is available for examination upon a moment's notice.

With every ounce of its energy directed toward the creation of a better grade of screen stories; and each story judged upon its merits as picture material, the Palmer organization has grown in three years to be the largest clearing house for photoplay material in the world.

Constant flow of material

To this clearing house comes a constant flow of ideas and stories of every description from all parts of the world. And in continually increasing volume comes a supply of original stories by writers whose ability we have discovered, and whose technique was acquired through the training course of our Department of Education.

That is the purpose of the Department of Education—first to discover, then to train the kind of people who are naturally gifted for screen writing. Ours is the only training school in the world operating by the correspondence method, which requires applicants to pass a psychological and literacy test before admission to training.

You have had experience searching for the right sort of story through a mass of material submitted by untrained writers—most of whom should never have tried in the first place to write for the screen. Every studio has had its scenario department filled with efforts of that sort. And every producer knows that the search for an idea from sources of that kind is like hunting for the needle in the haystack.

Tested before you see it

Try the Palmer way next time you need a good story for your companies. Nothing will be shown you that has not already been judged upon its screen merits by our own expertly trained readers and scenarists.

The cost of this service to the producer is nothing. The author pays our commission—straight 10 per cent, never more, never less.

"The Bashful Suitor"
(Triart Productions—Through Hodkinson Exchanges)

GORGEOUSLY mounted, telling a sweet and simple love story, and capably acted, this makes as wholesome and fascinating a short subject as an exhibitor could want. It is another of the series of two reel subjects inspired by famous paintings. Josef Israels' work, "The Bashful Suitor," hangs in the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York. It is a Dutch pastoral scene. In the foreground are two figures—a fresh, pretty, Holland country girl, and beside her a half-hesitating, rustic swain. From this picture they have made a story; not a very dramatic story, nor a very original one, but one of sufficient interest. And so perfect are the detail, the settings, the acting, that an audience can feel themselves in that fertile land of simple-living lace makers and dairymen. Such heart interest, such a tale of pure emotion, such a romance so enchantingly told, outweighs the punch of the melodrama, the wild action of the thriller.

For refreshment after a diet of melodrama, sex stories, and slapstick, try "The Bashful Suitor." We believe that an audience will welcome such a short subject; that it will win an exhibitor staunch friends among a class of people who are now unfriendly to the screen. For a simple love story, if it can be kept from the pathetic, and free from the gush the sentimentalist, is never old or never wearying.

The picture was directed by Herbert Blache, and the art work was executed by Lejaren Hiller. Mary Brandon and Pierre Grendron play the leading parts.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"The Lotus Eater" is different. It is jollily heretical.

Imagine a movie with a plot like this:

The hero falls in love with a beautiful woman who turns out to be selfish and extravagant after he marries her. She loses interest in him when she learns that he is not as rich as she had thought he was. So he goes away from her, disillusioned and somewhat bitter, on an airship, attempting to fly across the Pacific. He is wrecked near a remote island, where he finds a millenial colony of strange folk living in perfect peace and happiness. They have abolished the usual social conventions, uncomfortable clothes, caste, money and the like, and also the destructive human instincts to selfishness, jealousy, pugnacity and such. And the first person the hero meets on the island is a girl, a simple, true-hearted maiden, just the opposite of his over-civilized wife. He loves her, of course, and she loves him—and how should the story go from there?

There are two, and only two, orthodox ways for it to go. The island and everybody on it may be simply the hero's dream, and, its lesson learned, he may go back to his wife and tell her that pure, unselfish, back-to-the-best-in-human-nature love is "all that counts, and won't you try it with me, dear?"—which, of course, she does, and "they both find the happiness they had missed." That's one decision permitted by the rules.

It is also permissible, however, for the island and its people to be real. The movies are timid about becoming fantastic—that is, intentionally—but they try it sometimes, so the precedent is established. But they must be fantastic according to the constitution, which in this case would require the hero to wake up suddenly to the fact that he was shirking life's stern responsibilities among the Lotus Eaters. Then, his wife being disposed of in an automobile accident or something else as thorough, he would take his little island girl back to civilization, and, legally married, of course, they would prove that true love could thrive in a New York apartment as well as on an island of the southern seas. The proof would consist of a cradle into which they would both gaze lovingly, or perhaps of a waddling little fellow to whom they would stretch out their arms in the final fade-out.

These alternatives, it is submitted, are the only endings of the story permitted by movie tradition, which is law to nine out of ten producers.

But "The Lotus Eater" defies the law. Its hero leaves the island in the South Seas, which is a real island, to make one conscientious try at civilization again, and when he compares life in New York with life on his island he packs up and goes right back to the island and stays there. Lotus eating is good enough for him. He and his lady lotus eater are happy—civilization must get along as well as it can without them.

Isn't that different? Isn't it jollily heretical?

But, of course, it all depends on the way in which such a story is told, so it is pleasant to report that the manner of its telling is, on the whole, satisfactory. The most important thing is the acting of John Barrymore. As the hero he is a whimsically eager fellow, just human enough to be a little bit like many human beings, just odd enough to be refreshingly peculiar. He makes his character definitely vivid, too, by accurately expressive pantomine. Also, the others in the cast, Anna Q. Nilsson, Colleen Moore, J. Barney Sherry, Frank Currier, Ida Waterman, and Wesley Barry, do all, or nearly all, that is required of them.

The picture is also pictorial. That may seem a strange thing to say about a photoplay, but it isn't, because so few of them are substantially motion pictures. They are verbal narratives with animated illustrations. But Mr. Neilan has made "The Lotus Eater," with the exception of some scenes, essentially cinematographic. That means that it is often pictorially expressive, and so gives the spectator the fun of exercising his powers of perception. And the best thing to be said about George Ade, who wrote the subtitles, is that he has had the artistic restraint to put words only where they are needed. Unlike most writers recruited to the screen, he has refrained from labeling the obvious. And the titles he has written are brief and to the point

The only important fault with the photoplay is that it does not maintain any one mood consistently. It tends to melodrama sometimes, sometimes to heavy tragedy, and, in its best moments, it is lightly satiric. This is disturbing to the spectator, but the good parts of the picture are so enjoyable that its less satisfactory portions leave no feeling of annoyance.

ONE PICTURE IN 400, SAYS HEYWOOD BROUN

New York World

By Heywood Broun

Will Rogers remarked the other day that audiences are getting so critical about motion pictures that the producers have to make one out of every four a good one. "The Lotus Eater," now playing at the Capitol, is the one in four.

Indeed, it seems to us more likely that it is the one in four hundred. We have seen no picture one-eighth as amusing in a season.

John Barrymore being absent from our theatres, it is pleasant to have him with us even in shadow. It is, of course, generally only half a Barrymore which one sees in the films, for the actor is not ignorant of the advantages which his profile presents over any other approach to his countenance. He edges into the pictures, then, like a beautiful paper knife.

But so sharply and easily does he cut into the attention of the spectator that one is never conscious of any effort on the actor's part to insinuate his side face into the proceedings. Coming into the picture originally as a tragic old man, and a little later as a Byronic youth, there is no hint at first that Mr. Barrymore is to carry the story into realms of extraordinary jovial fantasy The early portions of the films are in the manner of the traditional tales of high life with the wife who yearns for luxuries beyond the compass of her husband's income. Her friendliness for one of those familiar stock brokers leads the young husband to risk his life in a dirigible trip across the Pacific.

There follows a reel or so of thrilling sky adventures with a remarkable parachute jump from on high into the ocean. Jacques Lenoi, the character played by Barrymore, sticks to the airship and is dumped upon what appears to be a lonely island.

Suddenly and without warning the mood and manner of the story change into extravagant foolery. The island seems to be one of the Filbert group discovered by Captain Traprock. It has been colonized by Utopians of the most winning sort. There is a marvelous restaurant where everything is free. Particularly fine are the salads, which are arranged by a New York financier, who formerly gave only his leisure to this art, but is now able to embrace the making of salad dressing as a career. No charge is made at the well stocked bar, and the young women who inhabit the island are emancipated.

The transition from heavy and stern faced melodrama to light-hearted foolery is sudden, but without irritation. Marshall Neilan, the director, has made up his mind that while a little suddenness may be disturbing, the way to put the spectator at his ease is to educate him into tolerance by a succession of quick changes and marvelous happenings.

We expressed a longing the other day for plays which transcend all judgments based upon reality by an audacious thumbing of the nose at probability. This is the successful gesture of "The Lotus Eater." A moment after Lenoi has landed upon his island he sees a tiger amble through a group of young people and playfully push one of them out of the way. In the bar he turns and finds a sporting kangaroo eager to try a bit of sparring with him. There is a commotion in the jungle and a small elephant walks down the main street of Utopia.

After all this, love at first sight, which is sometimes one of our sticking points, was plausible enough. Mavis, fairest of the younger set in the island, falls into a violent passion for the visiting profile. This, we feel sure, can hardly be classed among the improbabilities of the picture, for Barrymore has seldom seemed so glamorous as in his pictured life along the beaches of the island.

His is a countenance which can accept the emphasis of a rippling sea as a background. Indeed, there is no striking bit of scenery shown in the picture which does not fall naturally into the role of acting as a frame for the face and the figure of Barrymore. And the settings are worthy of the portrait. The photography is exquisite. The camera man seems to have been patient enough to wait for days which would give him a rousing breeze. He has not fired at the ocean until he could see the whites of its waves.

Lenoi is lonely in Utopia in spite of the devotion of Mavis. He prevails upon the islanders at last to let him return to New York. They agree and he comes home on a bleak day with the snow at least seventy-two hours ahead of the Street Cleaning Department. His taxicab becomes stalled. His bill at a cabaret is $72. He sees cheap and vulgar love-making all about him. His wife, he discovers, has married in his absence, believing him dead. Finding him alive, she runs away with still another man.

So Lenoi goes back to Mavis and the tropic island. The return of the wanderer is an exceedingly charming and imaginative piece of film acting and directing. Barrymore receives capital support from Colleen Moore as Mavis.

Since the picture is chiefly fantastic, we should not expect a moral, but there seems to be one for all that. It is a moral for marrying men, and it was: "If at first you don't succeed, try, try again."

MELODRAMA AND DELIGHTFUL COMEDY

New York Evening Post

The Capitol presents "The Lotus Eater," an Albert Payson Terhune story, with John Barrymore and directed by Marshall Neilan. This combination is almost as good as it sounds. The exteriors are artistic and Mr. Neilan makes the most of every situation. John Barrymore is good as Jacques Lenoi—both senior and junior—and plays the part convincingly.

The picture opens with melodrama and without warning becomes a delightful comedy.

Jacques Lenoi is warned against women and is kept on his father's yacht until he is twenty-five. He steps ashore in New York and falls in love with Madge Vance. After a short-lived happy married life, he joins an expedition to cross the Pacific in a dirigible. They drift for days and his companion makes a sensational parachute leap; Lenoi, however, goes on until he sights as island. It is inhabited by charming people, who have been shipwrecked. Tigers are as playful as kittens and food and liquor are free for all. Mavis, a winsome creature, falls in love with Jacques. He returns to New York and discovers that his wife has married a rich broker. After a day he becomes disgusted with the civilized world, and as his wife has conveniently eloped with a third man, he returns to his Paradise Island. John Barrymore is assisted by a good cast, including Anna Q. Nilsson, Collen Moore, J. Barney Sherry, and Wesley Barry. M

CONTAINS EVERY ENTERTAINING ELEMENT

New York Evening Telegram

John Barrymore returns to the screen at the Capitol Theatre this week in "The Lotus Eater." In addition, the occasion serves to bring together Marshall Neilan as director of the production, Albert Payson Terhune as author of the story and George Ade as writer of the subtitles, with a supporting cast that includes Colleen Moore, Anna Q Nilsson and Wesley Barry. The event is indeed a momentous one in screen circles.

every element of entertainment—tragedy, love, humor, adventure and romance.

Jacques Lenoi is born in a villa on the Mediterranean during his father's absence. When the father returns he finds his wife in compromising circumstances. He takes his infant son and flees with him aboard his yacht, where the child lives until he is twenty-five.

The broken-hearted old man thought thus to save his son from the disillusion and sorrow that was his. On his twenty-fifth birthday the young man lands in New York and falls in love with the first woman to whom he is introduced.

From that moment the story moves rapidly and without loss of action or footage to its startling donouement on an uncharted island in the South Seas.

MOST DIVERTING IN MEMORY

New York Telegraph

By Suzanne Sexton

If the South Seas are a state of mind, as Frederick O'Brien, our best known authority on those elysian fields, puts it, most of New York's masculine population will have the wanderlust complex before S. L. Rothafel changes the bill at the Capital Theatre.

John Barrymore, the Byronic, is there this week in "The Lotus Eaters." Marshall Neilan's screen translation of Albert Payson Terhune's story.

It is one of the most divertingly satirical productions within memory.

And most insidious propaganda for the South Pacific clime.

As the neurotic Jacques Lenoi, pere, the great Barrymore is beyond criticism. And as the lovable, poetic visionary, Jacques Lenoi, fils, who never saw a woman until he was 25, he will be understood and applauded by the sophisticated, the tired business man and the effervescent matinee girl. Mr. Neilan's tropical ensemble is gorgeous and artistic. Colleen Moore, Wesley Barry and Anna Q. Nilsson are among the capable players that he has included in Mr. Barrymore's support.

"The Lotus Eaters" has an Enoch Arden motif. This is a heritage in the wealthy Lenoi family. It is handed down from father to son with the private yacht and the oil stocks. The elder Lenoi, neurasthenic invalid, haunts the resorts checked off in the Ponce de Leon guide books. He leaves a beautiful young wife and a child he has never seen to wait alone. Another steals his wife's love. When Lenoi returns and finds the truth he carries off his young son to his yacht and never thereafter sets foot on land. Before his death he pledges the boy never to court wine, women or song until he is 25—or to set foot on land.

At 25 young Jacques follows in his father's footsteps by marrying unhappily. Like many another discontented Benedict he takes to travel. An unlucky attempt to cross the Pacific by aeroplane lands him in a socialistic paradise. This is the point at which all of the masculine necks in the audience begin to crane interestedly. For in this picture at least the Greek toga seems to have something on the Arrow collar as an article of conventional attire.

The particular isle on which Lenoi landed also had other good selling points—for the tired business man. It is inhabited by gifted men and women of all stations who have left civilization through ennui or shipwreck. The cuisine is excellent. There are no covert charges or lengthy checks. There is a fine wine cellar and no local Volstead. The tailor is not a man of any consequence. And the girls are all tropical Helens.

Just as he gets used to this idyllic state and falls in love with a South Sea beauty Lenoi begins to think about the wife back home. He returns to New York. She has believed him lost and married a broker. When she finds her first husband alive she solves the knotty problem for both of her husbands by eloping with a third. Which is both ingenious and obliging.

So Lenoi returns ecstatically to his South Sea paradise, the location of which he keeps dark, like all South Sea enthusiasts. And he marries the Pacific belle with the nutbrown curls.

"The Lotus Eaters" is a First National attraction. In addition to its other virtues, it has a coherent story forcefully told.

MADE NOTABLE BY GREAT ACTOR AND DIRECTOR

New York Journal

Marshall Neilan, who directs pictures of general excellence and who appears to have slight regard for screen conventions, has gone and done it. He has taken John Barrymore, a Terhune story and a camera and made a travesty. "The Lotus Eaters" has a Griffith start and a Sennett finish.

The Capitol theatre yesterday was crowded with people who sat complacently through the first two or three reels of the picture, finding just what they expected—plenty of dramatic tensity and Barrymorish personality—only to have their playgoing dignity smashed to smithereens in Reel 4 by Neilan's daredeviltry. Neilan takes Barrymore and transplants him to a mythical isle somewhere in the South Seas. Audacious, indeed, with Barrymore having the time of his life apparently.

"The Lotus Eaters" is about a woman named Mavis, a regular "put and take" when it came to matrimony and the second generation of the male side of the House of Lenoi, Frenchmen who were most unhappy in their matrimonial cruises.

It is a screen production notable for its frequent glimpses of a great actor transmitting his art to the cinema. Also for three distinct characterizations from this same actor—further notable for the quips of story and action given it by its director. The pair who share its honors are Barrymore and Neilan.

BEST FILM WE HAVE EVER SEEN

New York Globe

Just when the despondent film critic decides that there is no hope of justice in this world and that the best thing to do is to touch a match to all the celluloid in the world and go up to paradise in the resultant blaze, along comes a picture like "The Lotus Eater," and the aforementioned critic is transformed into a belligerent guardian of every foot of film with such delightful potentialties of fun.

We consider "The Lotus Eater" one of the best films we have ever seen. John Barrymore gives one of the best performances of his screen career as the star, and Marshall Neilan has directed the production with consummate skill.

The story is a fantastic affair by Albert Payson Terhune, fit to be known as a screen classic. We trust that in the foregoing superlative praise we have made it sufficiently clear that "The Lotus Eater" is a film that should be seen without fail.

The Capitol Theatre this week should be the rendezvous of all those who like their humor straight and followed by a smooth chaser of romance.

The story of this delightful film concerns a strange young man who spends the first twenty-five years of his life on a yacht. He has known no women during that time, except as they appeared before him on the pages of books. On his first visit ashore at the end of his sea penance he naturally clothes the first woman he meets with all the ideals inspired by his literary charmers. The lady, however, does not completely fulfil his ideals, and we see a disconsolate lover undertaking a dirigible flight across the Pacific in search of a thrill that may perhaps bring forgetfulness. The dirigible develops feminine characteristics at sea, however, and fails him.

The trans-Pacific adventurer thereupon falls into the sea, but is fortunately near enough to an isolated island to reach the safety of that small but dependable strip of land. We suspect, if sex prevails in the vegetable and mineral worlds, that the island was masculine.

There is on this island a delightful colony of wrecked and supremely happy castaways. There is no money there. Every one works for the comfort of every one else, and the result is universal happiness. One may do there whatever one desires. An Italian count had for years a secret desire to be a cook. His position forbade such common labor. On this Utopian island he is the master chef and one of the happiest of the supremely contented inhabitants. There is a bar at which spiritous liquors are dispensed without charge and the happy victims taken home on stretchers. Yesterday's audience broke into wild applause when this ultimate feature of Utopia was disclosed. The island is, in short, the sort of place we would all live in if we weren't such human human beings.

Our hero passes a perfect year on this island, but feels that it is his duty to return home. He finds that there is a way of getting back to his alleged civilization and returns. A short stay convinces him that he has made a mistake and he returns again to the island to live irresponsibly ever after.

We expect to mention "The Lotus Eater" again on this page and to consider in greater detail than is possible in this hurried review more of its many charms.

It is sufficient here to say that "The Lotus Eater" is without question one of the best pictures of the year.

New York Sun

"The Lotus Eater" at the Capitol this week gives John Barrymore an opportunity to play an unsophisticated youth, to marry a sophisticated girl, to try a flight across the Pacific in a dirigible, to fall into a South Sea island, with consequent romantic trimmings, to box a kangaroo—to do almost everything, in short.

But then, in this extremely variegated adaptation of Albert Payson Terhune's story, Barrymore quite evidently has a good time, and so does the audience, though the spectator has a constant feeling that either he or the star is going to wake up suddenly. The feeling of a dream is carried out by all sorts of bizarre happenings, and just as there is a menagerie of animals on the Pacific island, so the photoplay has a menagerie of sensations.

But Marshall Neilan has woven it into an interesting semblance of continuity, and his sense of humor keeps one right side up while tobogganing about over the map in the fashion of a Coney Island scenic railway. The travesty on Utopias in the island is delicious, and beautiful views, matched with the loveliness of Anne Q. Nilsson and Colleen Moore, assist Barrymore in an enjoyable picture, despite the fact that the hero's father has brought him up on a yacht secluded from women, and—fill in the details from memory.

The Year As We See It

THIS has been, as always, an interesting year in motion pictures, but a different one. There has been less revolution within the business, and more underneath it.

Like every other business under the sun, and paramount to all individual and internal experiences, the industry has been subject to the one great common economic disturbance—namely the reconstruction period after the greatest of all wars.

The development of the motion picture itself is covered in this issue by two capable reviewers—one from the trade and one from the public viewpoint. We are content, here, to speak of the commercial and industrial year.

From January till June this business held its own to a remarkable degree. The government tax reports on all so-called luxuries showed that sales began declining in 1920. We refer to automobiles, furs, jewelry, musical instruments, cigars, tobacco and cigarettes (all included with motion pictures in the special luxury taxes). Motion pictures not only did not experience the general decline, but, on the contrary, kept up the ascending sales of the war period.

Proving, pretty conclusively it seems, that the public has come to look upon picture entertainment as a family necessity—not a luxury. A most important fact—if we realize the everlasting truth that only a low price will keep this entertainment out of the luxury class, and within the great volume demand of the masses.

Then came a sharp break, resulting in the closing, at the peak of the Summer season, of fully 35 per cent of the picture houses. Producers and distributors, over-expanded and under-capitalized, felt keenly the sharp reduction in the inflow of cash from the exchanges. A sort of a crisis impended. Then September brought a general revival in box-office and exchange business. This has slumped off somewhat, and today we face the usual pre-holiday off season.

What does the year's business career mean? What does it portend?

We thought at first that the sharp break that began in June was the regular Summer slump made extreme by exceptional heat. But looking back we can see that it was an accumulated result of widespread business distress. The theatre is always last to feel general business depression. The box-office went merrily on in the Fall of 1920 and the Spring of 1921; but all the time things were cracking underneath. The great industries of agriculture, automobiles, rubber, woolens, cotton, metals, hide and leather, railroad equipment, oil, building materials, exports—each, in turn, came tumbling down from the giddy heights of false war prosperity. And as each fell, in its turn, localities faced unemployment that in the aggregate reached an army last Summer of six millions or more wage-earners. People continued to spend, however—out of savings, and the recklessness born of high wages; so that, actually, the picture business was the last to feel the general slump.

When the slump did come, last Summer—it came hard. It was an accumulation. And the exhibitor—his expenses and his own state of mind still geared up to war days (when, as one exhibitor puts it, people would crowd in a theatre with a smallpox sign over the entrance) wasn't prepared to meet it. And the pessimism of the producer and distributor didn't cheer or steady him a bit. So he either closed up or made hectic aand often ill-advised attempts to regain falling patronage.

Happily—very happily, this period is over with.

On the one hand, the country's business is over its sickness and decidedly and hopefully on the mend.

Today only the stabilization of international exchange (and this situation is far better right now than in two years) remains to give us a period of sound prosperity heretofore unequalled. There is no question about this; and we look for a fine, healthy revival as early as next Spring.

On the other hand, exhibitor, producer and distributor are out of their war daze and sanely and resolutely meeting the new and normal business situation. The plush trimmings have got to be cut out of the theatre program, the waste and extravagance out of production and the duplication and lost motion out of distribution. "Got to be" is right. The motion picture dollar from now on will be an American dollar only, worth just one hundred cents. This situation has often been prophesied. Today it is here.

There are some who believe, and we agree with them, that the strenuous period the industry is just emerging from will prove a blessing. It will make a house-cleaning; and it will result in sound economics. If so, it is worth while.

This is an exceptional business—but, exceptional only because of its tremendous hold on the public. There's a wonderful opportunity in it for men of business ability willing to work hard. But there's no velvet for anyone, and there's no secure place for the fakir.

There are two great, outstanding needs today, as we see the industry in prospective.

One is capital: the other is industrial organization.

The whole industry is under-capitalized. It has grown furiously, and invested capital has never kept pace with expansion. There is every incentive to spend and little thought to put by. The consequence is that a surplus is always lacking when a stringency comes. Depreciation isn't considered. And there's always a tugging at the purse-strings. Money, because it's needed quickly and without forethought, costs too much to borrow.

The answer is that the bank is needed in this industry. Not the promotion bank, not the private bank, but the commercial bank. We need, and surely this business has grown to the size where it deserves, regular commercial banking credit, the same credit that is a fundamental and integral part of every established business. There will be, we believe, more of this finance, and less of the promotion variety, from now on. We need new enterprise in production only; for distribution and exhibition we want rather a solidification of the present trade structure.

By industrial organization we mean that unity of effort which will promote and defend the welfare of the industry at large.

This need is supreme.

Because the picture, today, reaches at least one-tenth of the population daily, and at least half the population at intervals we have to do in a very large way with public opinion. And therefore public opinion will have, in a very large way, to do with us. There is no way to escape the very large responsibility the motion picture bears toward almost every family circle in this country. The man with his eye glued to his own balance sheet is apt to overlook this very large fact, but it is none the less large. And it's a business fact.

The point is simply this: if we don't present ourselves in the right way to the public, the public will form its own conclusions. The worst of it is the public has already done so, and its conclusions are so wrong that we are censored, and taxed and generally spat upon.

We've got to begin to speak out and in a broad, constructive way.

We've got to speak with one voice.

And to do this we've got to have one industry—united on all questions of public relations.

We have today a large and efficient exhibitor organization. And there is promised a new Association of producers and distributors. The first and foremost duty of these organizations, in the true interests of their members is so to affiliate that this solid unity of the industry may be had, and a wise and constructive publicity campaign launched to put right this industry in the public mind.

This need, we repeat, is supreme.

Nineteen hundred and twenty-two looks good. The theatre business while slower to recover because it was slowest to decline, cannot help but reflect the solid prosperity that is surely facing this country. The outlook calls for sanity only. If we were to express a Christmas wish it would be: that the New Year see a cessation of all civil warfare and politics and emotionalism and the same good energy expended in cool constructive business.

"See It Through" in 1922!

Here are a score of exhibitors who have succeeded

The third installment of the "Seeing It Through" contest articles appear on this and the following pages.

The contest, which closed Dec. 20th, has brought forth a grist of contributions that can not be handled in this issue. However, they will appear in succeeding numbers, selected in the order in which they were received.

All articles submitted will be judged shortly and as soon as possible the prizes awarded.

Clean Policy Wins

Three theatres in a town of ten thousand and making money! If that isn't a record it is something near it. Two of these theatres run every day, matinee and night. The third, a large combination house, plays only the larger pictures and the few road shows that venture on the one night stands this year.

If I were asked to name the chief reason for our prosperity in the face of trying financial conditions, I should readily say: "Good will."

Showmanship has its value. Exploitation is a faithful friend and modern equipment is a positive requirement, but for a dependable prop in times that are hard, commend me to "Good will."

To begin with, many exhibitors who are facing rocky travelling now can trace it to their greed during flush times.

In the face of big business during the "mad" days, we steadfastly resisted the temptation to raise our prices beyond a sane and fair level. Result? We have not had to reduce in the pinch.

But, surest route of all, we have never ceased to feed our public with the choicest entertainment that the film market affords. We have never lowered the standards of our houses. Our equipment is of the best. Our music superb and unfailing courtesy is as much a part of our service to the public as the picture itself.

Any exhibitor can build up "good will" for his houses by being what every man should be, a good citizen. By keeping our pictures clean, and it has taken some vigorous censoring in the past to do this, we have bridged the gap that ordinarily exists between the theatres and the churches in a small town.

When the storm of criticism directed against the film industry was raging at its highest we were sitting calm and unruffled. There was no agitation for censorship in our town because we had never resorted to the "No Children Admitted," "Ladies Only Matinees," nor any of the other "sure fire" methods that many showmen seized upon with so much avidity.

We knew there was a temporary profit in making a sexual appeal, but we also knew that it was only temporary. I can name two of the finest pictures of last year that never had a showing in our houses, because their principal appeal was sexual.

Naturally, we have had to trim our sails in spots to meet the slump. We studied long and earnestly over this. Was it better to cut salaries or discharge superfluous employees? We did the latter. We retained only those men who were needed urgently and have, so far, continued to pay them the same wages they have received for the past three years. They are more efficient because of this and we feel we have one of the best organized business forces in the South.

We did cut down some on our advertising, because, like many others, we were not getting results commensurate with the expenditure. By carefully checking up on every avenue of publicity we arrived at the smallest minimum with which we could operate this department. Sixty per cent of our appropriation goes to the newspapers, twenty per cent to the billboards and the other twenty per cent is used for mailing, stunts, heralds and incidental publicity.

A further saving was effected when we abandoned the policy of changing our pictures daily and substituted a four-picture-a-week policy. The result was a slight decrease in our gross, but this decrease did not equalize the saving in film rental and advertising.

We have rigidly adhered to the policy of selling the motion picture to the public. Not selling an individual picture nor any brand of pictures, but the industry itself. We remind them continually of our service to the government and to the State, and we continue to render that service as freely as we find it possible. We make our theatres public institutions that operate for public good, even at the sacrifice of a momentary profit.

In this way we have robbed the "knocker" of his chief weapon and disarmed the "reformer." We have convinced our public that the motion picture is worthy of their patronage and we are securing that patronage. We believe our policy will work anywhere for any man, but more especially in smaller cities where there is an opportunity for the exhibitor to get close to his patron.

E. W. Collins,

"Get Down to Normal"

Above the hue and cry of small profits, dwindling patronage and even losses in the motion picture exhibiting field, can be heard the strident appeal from theatre managers for a panacea, a remedy for their retrograding profits. I have come to the conclusion, after many disappointments and a battle with myself to throw off my luxurious war-profit frame of mind, that the only profitable way to "see it through," as you have phrased it, is to approach the moving picture business in the same frame of mind as one did before the war. By this I don't mean that a theatre manager has to disregard the many lessons he has learned in the past few years.

May I say at the outset, however, that any suggestions I may have to offer in helping my brother managers see it through are wholly the result of personal experience and are offered for what they are worth.

The next few months, and even the next year, will necessitate the exertion of every bit of showmanship ability available in a motion picture theatre manager. Incidentally, out of the next year's melting pot will step the managers who are not only managers but showmen. There will be no war profit public to compensate for real ability as showmen. So much for them. It will be the old story of the survival of the fittest.

Concrete suggestions and solid figures are our next consideration. Does economy in the theatre pay? The most successful showmen say that it doesn't, and when I say economy I mean a rigid, relentless economy that robs the product you are offering the public of any real worth. I believe, however, that economy intelligently practiced in the theatre helps. To cite what I mean, I will relate a personal experience. At my Lowell, Mass., theatre, the Strand, I established open shop conditions among the employes after a [illegible]ly battle with the unions. Instead of seeking long-term contracts with my musicians at practically war time prices, I obtained short time

We gave the man who should know his public an opportunity to tell his story

THE past year has been bad. It opened with the Cigar-makers on strike and this condition continued until spring. With the opening of the factories there was a little improvement in our business. With people at work again I increased my advertising. I am spending an average of $100 a week. This is quite a sum for a city the size of Ybor, but it has paid and I feel that it, with the careful selection of pictures that please my patrons, is what saved me from having to charge off a loss, instead of having a small profit, for this exceptionally bad year.

I am confident that things will be better from now on. We have another strike in the Cigar Industry, but I do not think it will last, as most of the workers see there must be some reduction in wages. I am booking my shows just as though there was no strike and shall continue my advertising as usual.

Regarding the closer harmony between Exhibitor and Distributor, I feel there should be more consideration given to local conditions by the Exchanges, as well as the fact that the Exhibitor must have a profit too. To illustrate: I have been buying service from a large company. Every picture they made, that stood a chance of pleasing my patrons, I have bought and I never tried to beat them down on a fair price. It so happened they produced an exceptional picture, one that I felt would be a money maker for me and which I would have willingly paid a real stiff price for. They offered me this picture upon a percentage basis. That would have been satisfactory but the conditions they tacked on made it impossible for me to accept.

First they dictated the admission prices, which would have been such a marked advance that it would have taken me some time to recover from the bad effect. They demanded 70 per cent of the gross receipts. I was to do my usual advertising, about $15 a day, and the excess of that amount would be taken from the gross.

Now, I figured it all out. If I played to capacity at their prices and terms I could make around $200 profit, but there was another condition in their contract. I had to agree to buy three other pictures at about four times the rental I had been paying for their other pictures. So, if they let me make $200 on their big picture, they would collect it later, with interest, on the other three.

If the Distributor is going to handle the Exhibitor in such a manner it is only a question of time until there will be fewer theatres than there are pictures, and then the Distributor will realize that they were the ones who killed the Golden Goose.

Manager of the Palace Theatre, Buffalo, and President of the Western New York Unit of the M. P. T. O. A.

THE year just closing has been a bad year in the picture business in Buffalo. After two months of very good attendance, a slump came in March which has persisted into the fall and winter.

While it has been complicated with other causes, such as hot weather in the summer and the opening of a large new theatre, still it is clear that there has been a drop of at least 30 per cent in the regular business in this section.

Such a drop in business can be met with difficulty if at all, by the average theatre, as profits have not averaged 30 per cent of gross income. The only way to meet such a situation has been, of course, a decided cut in expenses. This has been very difficult as regards the house expenses of most theatres on account of the labor situation; the unions having fixed a high scale during prosperous times and now are unwilling to take any reduction. The only feasible cut in most houses has been in the price of film, and this could only be applied where the theatre was not loaded up with franchises and long contracts.

One other cut that could be made and has been made in some houses has been a cut in the musical acts which have come to be put on as part of the show in so many theatres.

The possibility of economy, therefore, narrows down in most theatres to a possible cut in film prices and in music. These economies have not been generally applied, owing to existing film contracts and to fear of competition.

As a result, many if not most theatres in this section have been operating either at a loss or at no profit for many months.

An additional factor of loss has come in from the new censorship. The film manufacturers have evidently been afraid to make anything which has even a remote kick, and have put out the greatest collection of mother love and Northwestern outdoor pictures that the screen has ever seen. These pictures are as a rule poor box office attractions and exploitation has failed to attract a weary public to these mediocre productions.

The final liquidation of the picture show business thus involves three factors; the cancelling of long contracts and substitution of lower priced films; the doing away with unnecessary music costs, and the production by manufacturers of pictures with a real kick. Such a kick, of course, does not need to be at all suggestive but must have box office in it.

After these corrections are made, if the cost of shows is still above the power of the public to buy, there must be a reduction in price. That should not come until the government removes the unjust and unfair seat tax. The position of all picture show men should be, in regard to price reduction, that the first action must be taken by the government.

WITH war conditions gradually disappearing the business aspect promises a new picture in 1922. Many exhibitors have been clinging to these abnormal war policies, have been loath to relinquish them, but the time has come when a new basis of operation must be established.

1922 will find exhibitors everywhere facing the inevitable, which is this:

With the abnormal war condition eliminated, if prices are to remain the same, a new stimulus for business must be found.

That stimulus is—presenting a show that will satisfy, absolutely.

Hardly a motion picture theatre anywhere that today hasn't plenty of competition. In order to divert the public from the more than 110 motion picture theatres in Brooklyn to the Brooklyn Mark Strand, there must be a good reason. The same condition applies to almost every community in the United States and will be felt more than ever in 1922.

Has Depression Been General? And What is the Outlook? Here's the Answer

There must be a good reason why the public will pass by the increasing number of theatres to pick out a certain one for their favorite, especially when the same pictures may often be seen a few weeks later for a fraction of the admission price at the neighborhood theatre. That is a problem 1922 will bring before the exhibitor more pertinently than ever.

1921 has educated the public to expect a perfect musical setting. This is an element of 1921 progress that makes a theatre distinctive and lifts it above the mediocre class. 1921 has also educated audiences to crave the atmospheric prologue, tabloid versions of grand and comic opera, miniature presentations of musical comedies, special lighting effects, and all short film subjects carefully cut and scored. These things became part and parcel of 1921, and 1922 will find them even more important. This is my prediction.

1921 has found and 1922 will practise it—that when business slumps the chopping-down process is out of date and has been replaced by the determination behind which lies hard work and a desire to build up. Go ahead, not backward, is the new order of things.

All theatres are not situated that they are able to use soloists, prologues, etc., but every manager can do his utmost to sell his product. 1922 will call for a more sincere kind of theatre salesmanship in the motion picture industry. Some houses are of the type that can ballyhoo with productive result. Others of the more dignified type, especially neighborhood houses, can use the community mailing list to extreme advantage. Reference is made to names taken in the theatre, who through mailed programs, etc., are kept in direct touch with the activities of the theatre.

Competition in 1922 will be so keen that the wise ones will use every stimulus to make 1922 what it should be in net result. 1921 rewarded fighters and workers. So will 1922 reward fighters and workers.

These are the days when one may view a feature after five acts of vaudeville, and such a condition of necessity calls for a stimulus that will make the best minds work overtime.

BUSINESS during the past year has been bad, very bad, especially if we use last year as a criterion. Labor conditions have been the principal reason for this as the thousands that have been out of work have just refused or were unable to go to the theatre. Then too the public has been so educated to expecting to pay a high price for a good picture that they have actually gone shopping and very often we have had the paradoxical situation of playing to more people at fifty-five cents than we did at forty cents. They thought that if we boosted our price to fifty cents that the picture must be good. The future looks good, very good, though I think that the return will be gradual.

The public want human interest pictures, no costumes. Never mind the star. Give them a good story and a good title. Too many producers overlook the value of titles. The title is oftentime the handle that brings the public into the theatre. The good old barnstorming plays with their real stories and better titles are what we need. A little more showmanship and a little less high finance and we will have real pictures. If the exchanges would do less auctioning of their real pictures it would make for better harmony between the exhibitors and the exchanges. Any one who has booked pictures especially for a first run house knows what I mean.

By BRUCE FOWLER

Manager, Elmwood Theatre, Buffalo, N. Y.

THE business year just closing contained three distinct phases. The three phases were as follows: Opening to big business, a summer with a slump and finally closing, a fall with a weak opening but building up splendidly and consistently.

A survey of the general market condition shows a steady strengthening in practically all groups. Individually this business will prosper likewise providing the exhibitor will give the same thought to his reconstruction program as has so-called "Big Business."

The public is on a purchasing diet. Patrons have become careful, shrewd amusement buyers. They go where the best value is received for their money. It does not matter whether the admission is ten or fifty cents providing they get what they consider "good measure."

More intelligent construction of programs, more and better advertising and improved presentation is expected and demanded.

"Movie fans" are literally "fed up" on "canned goods" and routine manufactured productions. The public as a whole is demanding a more liberal display of art in pictures, for example, the directorial genius of Griffith, the acting of George Arliss, the comedy of Lloyd. Art is stories, scenarios and settings should be forthcoming. It is sadly lacking in the majority of releases.

A closer understanding of values will help a great deal toward bringing harmony between distributor and exhibitor. To determine properly the true value of any article and to sell or to purchase it for its true worth is a tremendous problem, but it can be solved by applying Facts and Truths where they are conspicuous by their absence."

I WILL have to say that I have found the quality of pictures to have been generally poor. The future looks uncertain to me, and I think it will depend upon the quality of the pictures which are offered and the disposition of producers to cooperate with the exhibitors by making lower prices to meet the existing conditions. The business will take care of itself if the producers are reasonable in this regard. The public is showing an increased demand for comedy-dramas, with well-known stars in the cast.

Taboo heavy drama and make prices to fit local conditions. Distributors have been insane on price questions too long. They must wake up or all concerned will suffer as a result.

A Fan Paper Critic Says—

This Film Year Has Been a Fan's Year

By Robert E. Sherwood of Life Magazine

WHATEVER else may be said of 1921 (and I have heard several people say some pretty darned harsh things about it), it's been a great year for the film fans.

The motion picture industry itself has been subjected to a series of body blows which have been pretty close to knock-outs in a number of cases. What is more, the industry was not prepared for the rough handling that it has absorbed. During its career of unprecedented prosperity it had little experience in taking punishment, and therefore every wallop that it has received from Old Man Fate has hurt.

But the fans have sat back in their ringside seats and enjoyed the spectacle. Like the crowds at a Spanish bull-fight, they have yelled for blood. And they have been getting it.

To its eternal credit, be it said, the motion picture industry has stood up gamely. And while it was being buffeted about by business conditions, it has developed itself, and improved to a greater extent than in any previous year of its existence.

The fans, then, have won out at both ends of the line: they have seen the film industry go into the financial slump which it was bound to face sooner or later; and at the same time they have been treated to a better run of pictures than ever before. Incidentally, since they themselves have been suffering from acute anaesthesia of the bank-roll, they have been more careful to pick their pictures.

Two years ago they went to the movies without caring much what they saw. As long as their local exhibitor gave them the requisite number of reels of animated photographs they didn't complain. The result was they became so satiated with mediocre material that when a really good picture came along they didn't know what to make of it.

Now, however, they can't afford to go to the movies every night. And when they do go, they are anxious to make sure that the evening is not wasted. So they select only those photoplays that have proven themselves worthy of patronage. Fortunately there have been many such to pick from.

There have been few startling upsets. The favorite stars have all held their own, and, in many cases, have climbed to greater heights than they knew before. Also, the number of new stars who have risen from the ranks and burst into sudden prominence is negligible.

In the latter group, the most sensational, without question, is Jackie Coogan. His performance of "The Kid" was electrifying, and was sufficient to put him in the very front rank of screen artists—old and young, large and small. But a Jackie Coogan does not happen more than once in a life time, and we need hardly look for a similar achievement in this generation, at least. The only others who have succeeded in establishing themselves as legitimate stars this year are May McAvoy and Gareth Hughes, in "Sentimental Tommy"; Agnes Ayres in "Forbidden Fruit," "The Sheik," etc.; Pauline Starke in "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court," Salvation Nell," etc.; Betty Blythe in "The Queen of Sheba"; Gloria Swanson in "The Affairs of Anatol," "The Great Moment," etc.; Gladys Walton in "Shirt Skirts," etc.; Betty Compson in "At the End of the World" and "The Little Minister"; and Rudolph Valentino and Alice Terry in "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" and "The Conquering Power." Mr. Valentino's subsequent portrayal of "The Sheik" was one of the high spots of the year.

Of the established stars who have increased their prestige in 1921, Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, and Charlie Chaplin, as always, stand out. Miss Pickford was at her best in "Little Lord Fauntleroy," and Mr. Fairbanks reached the top level of triumph in "The Three Musketeers." "The Kid" is unquestionably the greatest Chaplin picture, combining, as it does, his unconquerable comedy with an intense human interest.

Charles Ray produced two notable photoplays, "The Old Swimmin' Hole" and "Scrap Iron," and Bill Hart, jogging along steadily as ever, did nothing spectacular except get married. Norma and Constance Talmadge, after weak starts, both came back strong in "The Sign on the Door" and "Woman's Place," respectively. George Arliss made an auspicious start as a screen star in "The Devil" and "Disraeli," and Elsie Ferguson materially strengthened her position with "Footlights" and "Peter Ibbetson." Richard Barthelmess made one fine picture, "Tol'able David," but the Gish sisters were conspicuous by their absence from the field of action. They were evidently marooned out in Mamaroneck, waiting for the snow to fall, so that Mr. Griffith could shoot the exteriors of "The Two Orphans."

Thomas Meighan did consistently good work, his "City of Silent Men" being a masterpiece. Wallie Reid performed acceptably in a number of productions, and received more mash notes than ever. Will Rogers made his best picture, "Doubling for Romeo," and then went back to the Ziegfeld Midnight Frolic—leaving Hollywood cold. Priscilla Dean had a good year, with "Outside the Law," "Reputation" and "Conflict," but Eric von Stroheim was not represnted, except by the advance publicity for "Foolish Wives." Mabel Normand effected a come-back in "Molly O." The two Barrymores, Lionel and John, dabbled in pictures with their usual success, and the three Moores, Tom, Owen and Matt, kept up a consistent average. Pearl White provided some stalwart action in "A Virgin Paradise," but the rest of her films were flivvers.

Of the stars who neither gained nor lost much ground, I might mention Conway Tearle, Mary Miles Minter, Tom Mix, Constance Binney, Alice Joyce, Bert Lytell, Marion Davies, Elliott Dexter, Alice Brady, Dorothy Dalton, Sessue Hayakawa, Wanda Hawley, Corinne Griffith, William Desmond, Edith Roberts, Clara Kimball Young, Monte Blue, Bebe Daniels, Harry Carey and Shirley Mason.

Certain stars have not featured as prominently as of yore, among them Nazimova, William Farnum, Pauline Frederick, Anita Stewart and May Allison. Theda Bara has gone into a state of voluntary eclipse.

Honorable mention must also be made of the "unfeatured" players who have distinguished themselves in picture after picture, although their

The Jury—The American Public—Approve

By Laurence Reid

THAT old hue and cry—What is the matter with the Motion Picture?—which has been raised since the birth of the first photoplay, has bounded forth again. Like the Republicans when they sweep into power condemning the Democrats for permitting the country to go to the bow-wows, or when the Democrats are successful and upbraid the Republicans for making a mess of government, this irresistible, reverberating clamor will go on unceasingly, for it is given to man to express an opinion. His reasoning faculty and his gift of speech demand an outlet. But where the Democrats and Republicans, and even the parlor Bolshevists, occasionally declare an armistice—to rest their vocal chords preparatory to renewing the conflict, the battle is ever being waged against the poor, downtrodden motion picture.

They have backed the decrepit old FIGURE against the wall and are giving no quarter—they have riddled him full of holes and shot him full of poison gas, but with all this concentrated warfare he remains a very active corpse. Being charged with an excessive nerve force, he is able to withstand any intensified song of hate. Certain pallbearers suffering from "bacilli literati" would group about his invisible bier. But like one of his transparent dissolves or an allegorical exposure, he exists in the shadow world—above and beyond the torments of the flesh. He is the most grossly maligned FIGURE on earth. He has been painted as spineless, commercial, mercenary—a thing without heart or soul. But he goes on singing his romantic song with unbounded health and enthusiasm. This vituperation has only succeeded in strengthening his character. His simple mission is to enable everyone (even his tormentors) to find the Road to Happiness.

The would-be mourners or the potential pallbearers are eternally asking—What is the matter with the Motion Picture? They haven't cried "Wolf!" They have barked "Woof! Woof!" For their papers are nothing but a woof of words. They will point out statistics showing that the intelligence of the picture public is that of a child of twelve. As well condemn them for preferring ham and eggs to pati-de-foi-gras. Granting that there is no cultural background in their lives, they are constantly striving to see the light. The telephone, the talking machine, the macadam road, the flivver—these and other elements are bringing them a new perspective. That the American public is not decadent in its taste is proven in the literary quality of "best sellers" over ten years ago. Minstrels shows and even circuses are becoming passe. Ample proof that the intelligence is improving. They will leave their toilsome struggles of the day or the dull monotony of their homes at night—to bask in the sunshine of illusion. And the picture theatre catches them.

Like Gaul this public may be divided into three parts—those who prefer the average picture similar to the average story found in the average fiction magazine—those who worship at the artistic shrine, and those who go to see their beloved favorites regardless of the theme or title. That the producers, taken collectively, have their hands on the pulse of the situation, is proven in the mass of average pictures produced for the average patron, balanced by the star system for those who demand them and the artistic production which appeals solely to the intellect—there being no commercial taint connected with it. There is no trend of motion picture production beyond providing the patron entertainment for the hour. Doubtless many years hence the producers will arrive at the high artistic plane. But the enterprise or industry or what you will—is too new. There must be experiment. A pot of gold cannot be wasted haphazardly in creating a demand for artistic achievement when the picture public is not ready to leave the wilderness—when that public is not ready to see beyond the horizon of its circumscribed existence.

There is a handful of stars who have created a wide following. When they have fulfilled their destinies a new constellation will appear. In the meantime the public is hungry for pictures just so long as they entertain. So countless stories are being ground through the movie mill. The mills of these movie gods grind quickly without being exceeding fine. But they are showmen first and artists afterward. And one of the principles of the picture industry is to make money. Certain sections of the country demand westerns, others want the simple romance, and some others want the artistic picture. There is no change—just an even current. Broadway successes and failures are being adapted, and so are the works of famous authors and some not so well known. Literary celebrities are much in demand. Once they scoffed—and it is our impression that many are scoffing yet—but it is money makes the mare go.

With our ear to the ground and our eye on the silversheet we have reached the conclusion that a goodly share of them will never reach the pinnacle that they held in their fiction world. Perhaps the screen has frightened them, or perhaps they have not accustomed themselves to its demands, but the fact remains that the original scenario writer still dominates the scene, because, through experience, he has gauged the essentials of picture drama. There has been a depression the past year in the financial world, which prevented producers, with a purpose, from realizing their ambitions. Some of them have gone right ahead and produced successes. Broadway may have a disastrous season in regard to poor attractions, but the hits are packing them in and some are "holdovers" from the previous year.

The tendency the past season has been to produce the simple story of country life or the light domestic comedy-drama. We submit for your inspection "Tol'ble David" and "The Old Nest." Westerns have taken on a form of burlesque insofar as Tom Mix is concerned. Lately there appeared a western novelty—a satire on "The Three Musketeers" entitled "Fightin' Mad." Others worth mentioning are "The Fox," "The Iron Trail," "The Testing Block," "The Sky Pilot" and "The Man of the Forest." It must be said that many stars featuring the cowboy drama are relying solely upon stunts. This is an advance because the western plot does not offer many variations from an old theme. There have been some impressive adaptations. What of "The Affairs of Anatol," "The Heart of Maryland," "Black Beauty," "Little Lord Fauntleroy," "Peter Ibbetson," "The Sheik," "Sentimental Tommy" and "You and I?"

A Managing Director Says—

Patrons Have Learned to Appreciate the Good

By Joseph Plunkett of the New York Mark Strand

FROM the exhibitor's point of view, since I may be more qualified to speak from that angle, there is one predominant thought which is of infinite importance to the motion picture industry. I am not enough of an authority on the financial situation to be able to give first-hand quotations on the passing year's prosperity, but I wish to say without going any further that the past year has been the most instructive one in the history of motion pictures. That should prove most valuable to us in the long run.

The foregoing is so self-evidently a truism that it might be said that I could stop right here and assume that I have covered the subject completely, but my main purpose is not to prove how prosperously the industry has fared or how instructive the past year has been. My purpose is to explain to my fellow exhibitors, through the aid of retrospects of course, the whys and wherefores on which my assertion is based. My object furthermore is to prove that the trend of motion pictures has everything to do with conditions in general. Whether conditions will in any way affect or swerve the trend of motion pictures is of little consequence right now. What should interest us most at this particular moment is "What has the trend of motion pictures in the past year been?" and by knowing that much we can continue with our analysis.

From all appearances combined there results at least one forceful diagnosis that may be taken at its face value, its veracity being imminent, and that is the motion picture's trend toward stories of vitality and vastness; namely, toward the classics of literature. The majority of our literary classics in the last few years have for detailed reasons been of the historical subject matter, and the public has learned to like them. Consequently the public has learned to like the historical drama also and has a greater appreciation for it now. This means that it likes the emotional picture, which was at one time looked upon with a certain disfavor. In short, it takes the good story to make the good picture, as the public has learned to believe implicity.

Audiences for the most part no longer comprise the gullible lot that was wont to accept anything that was offered them disguised as inaudible drama; no more will they make allowances for the helpless infancy of the screen's product and let it go at that. Neither will the producer's or exhibitor's apologies for the film's crude state of being suffice to abate the displeasure incited. What is to be done? . . . Now that audiences can distinguish for themselves the good pictures from the poor with infallible accuracy—and have it in their power to act accordingly, and that is usually in a way that is injurious to both producer and exhibitor—it is wholly dependent upon the former to continue to stand in the valuable good graces of an outraged but splendidly faithful public. So much for that, but not all.

Since the question of the star system has a direct bearing on what I have just written and may therefore be looked upon from a vantage point, I can only add with a certain amount of deference that it is still in vogue with, however, this proviso: that the picture in which the star appears is a good one. In the event that our friend the star is so unfortunate as to have a poor vehicle, the picture will have a good opening, but the remainder of the week will suffer visibly from the tell-tale effects of the picture's inferiority. Which leads us to cognizable conclusion that "the photoplay's the thing" after all.

Still, I grant you, the producer cannot attempt to dispense with the stars; that (the star) is at least some advance assurance of the picture's merit and indubitably serves as a valuable attraction.

The most logical thing for the producer to do in the present circumstances is to secure the great copyrights which are adaptable to the screen. And there isn't a shadow of a doubt that the generally acknowledged literary masterpieces can be made into successful pictures which will ultimately prove to be the greatest money makers. The reason is probably obvious, but despite my fear of being redundant I shall state that the widely-read story is most suitable since it is already familiar to the inveterate picture-goer and others and is subsequently most popular in screen form. Secondly, what book-loving person can deny himself the pleasure of seeing the characters as he imagined them, come to life on the screen?

Moreover, suggest a costume picture to a good many of the exhibitorial fraternity and they will reply to you with thumbs downward. Now in my estimation, the exhibitor should no more be wary of the costume picture than any other. If it is a good picture in every other respect, there is no reason why costumes should lessen its general appeal. This much must be borne in mind continually: that the spectator is impartial in so far as type is concerned, and that he will consider favorably any style of picture, irrespective of location, costumes, nationality and etc., as long as intrinsic quality is represented therein.

The case of Douglas Fairbanks' production of "The Three Musketeers" may be utilized as one notable example in the illustration of my point.

When the exhibitor considers the subject of nationality, he invariably takes into serious consideration the value and effect of foreign pictures in this country. Foreign pictures have proven even to the contrary minded that competition, to give it a new twist, is the spice of the film industry. To the exhibitor some of them have been a godsend, particularly since they came at a time when the market here was lagging. To the producer they have been a stimulant for which everyone, including the layman, may be thankful. Spurred by foreign example to make finer pictures, the producer must of a necessity make them or become trampled upon in the art. As a result of this oppression we shall within the period of a year again be able to hold up an American film as a criterion.

I have learned that we must put aside our prejudices when studying the work of our neighbors, because the only logical way to excel them is to improve upon their example as they have improved on ours. . . . It is quite true that there are foreign films of inferior rank, but what is of the utmost importance to us is that they also have good pictures to offer competition to our good pictures; and our chief aim should me to surpass them, because we can. We have done it before and certainly can do it again.

New York Exhibs Urged to Adjust All Grievances

When the old year passes out the exhibitors and exchangemen in the New York State and Northern New Jersey territory will know the results of the first "Clean-Up" Week in the industry.

It has been urged that every exhibitor and exchangeman settle all pending grievances during the week December 24-31 so that the newly appointed official "Joint Grievance Committee" can operate efficiently under the new standardized rules without any old adjustments to handicap it.

President Charles L. O'Reilly of Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York State has completed arrangements with the F. I. L. M. Clubs of both Albany and Buffalo for a "Joint Grievance Committee" in both zones with equal representation of theatre owners and exchangemen.

President William Brandt of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce has already seen his committee in action jointly with an equal number of representatives from the F. I. L. M. Club of New York City in settling all trade grievance affecting Greater New York, Long Island and Northern New Jersey.

There will be a sort of a "Supreme Court" where appeals can be taken but none are expected to be taken if the present work of the Joint Grievance Committee continues to be so satisfactory in its decisions.

"Clean Up Week" finds all the exchange men pledged to meet all the exhibitors more than half way to clean up all pending arguments anent playdates, service and claims, so that the industry can start the new year right in its most important territory.

Minneapolis Film Board of Trade Elect Officers

With every member in attendance and with much enthusiasm displayed, the Minneapolis Film Board of Trade held their annual business meeting the past week and elected officers for the ensuing year. A. Artcolor Has Produced in Natural Colors

A letter received from C. Lang Cobb, general sales manager of Artcolor Pictures Company, Inc., contains a correction of a statement which appeared in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS recently concerning J. The Artcolor Pictures Company has been producing pictures in natural colors since 1916, states Mr. Cobb, and Mr. Blackton's production is not pioneer work.

JUST A CHRISTMAS "STORY"

By GEORGE D. GOULD

ARMED and protected with a triple steel plated coat of nerve, we ventured forth into the highways and slyways of Broadway's film rows a few days ago with the stern and unswervable determination NOT to fall foul of Christmas statements and prognostications for the coming year, emanating from executive or press agent. Disguised as we were, in film salesman's garb, we entertained a reasonable feeling of security against button-holing prophets.

But to what avail are the plans of the editorial scribener when the wily word stringers of publicity departments sharpen their pencils and plant their gas bombs? Scarce had we bucked the Godfrey Building Front for a scant three yards, and gasping and winded were about to yell "Down" when we were grasped by a smaller edition of Fairbanks' "D'Artagnan"—that able representative of United Artists yclept Charles Moyer.

"Gone," we whispered to ourself, hopelessly, as we were led to the modern day cafe and regaled with a malted milk. But not so. For to our dumbfounded ears came the following:

"Glad to see you. Just want to tell you we will have no publicity matter for the Holiday issue. Going to dispense with that trite custom. No, no, not a line will I send out."

Dazed and grief stricken (?) we wandered out—and into the path of Metro Jack Medeor.

"Probably won't have any advertising this week," bustled Jack, "and I am not sending out any publicity. Mr. Loew has nothing to say to the trade, Mr Atkinson has less. So you will have to pardon us if we don't issue Holiday announcements and forecasts."

Shortly we felt like one of the "Foolish Wives," for within the Universal sanctum, Henry Bates read the riot act to us, set his foot down with stern emphasis, and delivered an ultimatum to the effect that so far as Mr. Laemmle and Mr. Cochran were concerned, all predictions on the future of the industry could be left up to the famed Parisian seeress, Madame Thebes.

Three blows in an equally short space of time left us hanging to the ropes. "Sunk without warning," began to be more than an idle phrase to us.

Our feelings may better be imagined than described when modest Sam Palmer of Paramount, who deservedly earns the soubriquet of "Fifty Story a Week Sam," and the retiring Joe Reddy of Pathe fame, stopped a moment, gave hearty assurance of Mr. Zukor's, Mr. Lasky's and Mr. Brunet's best wishes for a Merry Christmas—and passed on their way, without even the twitch of a typewrite finger to betray any repressed longings.

Surely, we reflected, pro-hip-ition has wrought strange changes. Could we not look back to yonder year when a well-oiled typewriter—and operator—could produce oleogenious phrases of prophetic tenor with the speed and directness of a machine-gun? Vraiment.

The surprises of the day, augmented by lack of even a drop of the revivifying tonic banned by the 18th Commandment, found us in weakened condition as we entered the Educational sanctum where Major O'Mahoney holds sway. Astonishment, deadened already by the repulses of the hour, was beyond manifestation as we listened to the dictum:

"Unaccustomed as I am to seeking—or finding—publicity in the trade magazines, it should be apparent to you it is a waste of time to seek or expect Holiday announcements from this office. In fact the publicity department has been given the week off. Don't slam the door on the way out."

Denoting a lapse of time and the passage of some six bits wherewith to varnish our nerves and somewhat restore their equilibrium. And we find ourself in the den of the "Curly Wolf," once the amiable Bob Welsh of Motion Picture News. Here for a certainty, we felt sure, we would be boiled to a five minute hardness, loaded with manuscript and sent on our way. We weren't sure of his title—for whatever Wid Gunning isn't, in his organization, it appears the former editor is—but we bravely advanced, only to be forestalled with:

"Nix, no, nothing. I am compelled to adhere to the beliefs I held while a slave to copy. I don't believe in trying to grab publicity space in the shape of pretty holiday prognostications. Am utterly and finally opposed to it. And that's that!"

A hasty exit, then with lagging steps but a lightened heart we wafted our presence into the "spirituous" atmosphere of First National, and following the scent shortly encountered Lin Bonner as the source, and Les Mason close at hand.

"A Christmas statement from J. D.?" queried Mason in astonishment. "What do you think we are, publicity seekers? Nothing doing. We have plenty of Christmas cheer around and within us—but not in the shape of statements."

And so it went. At Fox we found Vivian Moses adamant. Howard Dietz at Goldwyn was extremely busy writing—but it was a poem for the Sun Dial berating Don Marquis' educated cock-roach.

A few more visits and we turned officewards, tired, but happy in the findings of the afternoon.

And on our desk we found two foot-high stacks of New Year predictions, and learned again of the youth of the industry.

agreements which would provide later for a revision downward.

When business slows up and the box office profits are meagre, the average manager, including myself, of course, has an instinctive desire to reduce the prices on films, that is, by buying pictures cheaper in price and, I am sorry to say, cheaper in quality. Instead of doing this, however, I did just the reverse and went after the big features, paying considerably more than I have ever done before, but taking my programs as a whole and averaging for the season the prices that I pay for pictures are less than a year ago, as I saw to it last July that I got a reduction from the exchanges that are now in force. I was rewarded almost immediately with increased business and better satisfied patrons. And speaking of features, I found that there was considerable difference in the quality of the so-called big specials. Advertising may often help a weak picture, but it will never lead me to buy one. My patrons, no less than those of a score of New England theatres, no longer dash madly into the foyer, buy their tickets and are in their seat before they know what the program is. They are showing a fine discrimination in pictures; they want the best, and if I haven't it to offer they will go to my competitors. Fortunately, I believe I am giving them the best, and their loyalty assures me that they believe it is the best.

My advice to the exhibitor is, charge smaller prices and give bigger and better programs, and swallow your smaller profit like a gentleman. Although the locality and the temperament of your patrons often plays a big part, I have found to my satisfaction that it is the best policy to reduce the cheaper seats still further. The average working man, who a few months ago was a war god of the best orchestra seats, is now the gallery god if he can afford to get into the theatre at all, and Mr. Working Man constitutes a larger portion of the average audience; and just now, we all know only too keenly, he must needs count his pennies very carefully.

In closing, please do not think I am a pessimist when I say that the manager who refuses to set aside his big profit ideas and his wartime successes will never see it through. He must set his house in order to meet new conditions, bringing with them greater effort on his own part and less return. The manager who doesn't yield to some such belief as this has my entire sympathy. He'll need it, and more, too. May the Lord have mercy on his soul.

Shops for Pictures

I saw it through by taking myself into a corner and giving myself a little talking to. I made many investigations and studied each angle and department of my theatre and amongst other things made one startling discovery—THE PEOPLE WERE NOT ENTERING MY LOBBY AND MAKING A BEE-LINE FOR THE BOX OFFICE, THEY WERE STUDYING THE ANNOUNCEMENTS AND FIGURING THE ENTERTAINMENT POSSIBILITIES IN THE PROGRAM OFFERED—this told me that the public were shopping. Much has been said of $35,000.00 pipe organs gorgeous lounging rooms, and beautiful foyers, but I became convinced that the people wanted pictures, good pictures, big, colossal, timely, interesting pictures, sold to them truthfully and at an admission proportionate to their value.

I am doing business. I am satisfied. I did not cut a wage or reduce a force, and the answer is the public are showing and the exhibitor must do the same thing. This is an age of specialism, if one becomes ill he does not consult the old time bleeder, he repairs to a specialist immediately, who in most cases effects a cure. I specialize in pictures, of the biggest sort, of the better kind, and that's how I saw it through.

I am not discounting the labor and industrial situation, but I absolutely do know that people want recreation, want amusement and entertainment, and we who are to supply them must guard our trust, sacredly, and procure the best, present it properly (not necessarily elaborately) and the people will come, but once you "cheat" and slip over a cheap picture, you are killing the goose that lays the golden egg, destroying movie fans instead of creating, and digging your own grave. Results, not theories, count. R. G. PELTIER,

How We Met Adverse Conditions

To begin with, we were both new in the picture business; when my father and I invested our savings in The American. We had no idea of the expenses, but soon found that it took money to run a picture house.

Everything was against us, when we took over the house in August. A poor season to begin with, competition with a modern house, a store front on our own house and only one machine. But we had the best in location.

Of course, we made a few changes in the house itself and had a fairly successful opening. Imagine our dismay when we found that we were running to a loss each night. We began to look around.

We found that we were getting our share of the crowds. The people simply were not coming. It was useless to advertise heavily, for while the advertising might pull for one show it would not continue to pull; besides the town was almost over-advertised, if you know what I mean. Our salvation lay in cutting expenses.

This is where we started.

About the time we purchased, a salesman of one of the big exchanges called, and being enthusiastic, we took a contract booking expensive pictures almost solid. At that time we were changing program nightly with the exception of Thursday and Friday. On those nights we ran a "super production."

Our first attack at expenses was to cancel some of these big pictures and book cheaper ones. Then our troubles began. The exchange came after us for canceling their productions, the cheaper pictures were cheap and the cheaper film kept breaking. Naturally the attendance fell off, it couldn't help it.

It wasn't long before the salesman called to see our reason for making so many cancellations. When he saw our condition, he made a cut in prices. That helped a whole lot, for we stopped using so many of the cheaper pictures and gradually pulled our patrons back. But we were unable to put over the "supers."

Then we looked towards our prices. The same prices were charged for the "supers" as for the regular program picture. We had been told that our competitor had been in the habit of changing his prices for different productions, with the result of a very dissatisfied public. Nevertheless, we decided to raise the price for those "supers."

One night we started a slide to the effect that on a certain night, and on certain nights thereafter, we would have what we called Feature Nights. On these special pictures would be shown to an advance in admission. That advance admission was called Feature Prices.

Did it work? It did. Not one complaint, and several favorable remarks. Feature Nights are now established, the people expect them, and the surprising thing about it is that our other nights began to show a small increase in attendance. Of course, we lost on the first Feature Night, but not as much as we would have under the old system. We would be afraid to discontinue these "Nights" for fear that we would get no attendance on Thursday and Friday, and that our patrons would think we were showing cheaper pictures.

During this time we were working on our advertising.

Our predecessor used very little advertising, no newspaper at all. We increased the amount of posters, and used the newspaper. Now we are using the same amount and less of posters and no newspaper. On Feature

Nights we increase the amount of posters. Our attendance is holding the same.

Our biggest streak of luck came a few weeks ago.

One day a commercial artist and sign painter mentioned to us that he was looking for a place to use as a shop. As we had a room that he could use, you may be sure that we were not long in making an agreement with him that he was to do our painting for the use of the room.

I told you before that our theatre was a store front. We decided to utilize the big window, so some oilcloth frames were made at a small expense. On these frames we had him paint scenes relative to the picture and put them in the window. You can see that these scenes were to us what lobby display would be to a modern house. Needless to say these displays help the attendance, though we use them only for Feature Nights.

To return to the program.

We found that there were very few patrons who came every night, so we decided to run one less picture a week. Our program for the week now is—Monday, a serial (two episodes and a news reel); Tuesday and Wednesday, a regular program picture with some good star; Thursday and Friday, feature nights; Saturday, a western, some out-door picture or a comedy and a two-reel comedy or two-reel western.

Although we have several contracts of cheap pictures, we are not using them. For us, it is more profitable to run fewer good pictures than it was to run the cheap ones. For that reason we are not even trying to run the pictures to get out deposit back.

No changes were made in the music. We have a violin and piano and try to play to the pictures. Our competitor has a seven piece orchestra two and three nights a week. Last night we had a larger attendance for our second Feature Night than he did with his orchestra and a new picture starring a very popular young lady.

Our experiments must have made good.

Economy Now the Watchword

Motion pictures of the present are the finest in the history of the industry, but they are no longer a novelty. It requires merit to attract and the fittest showman is he who presents his patrons with dollar-for-dollar values in the most attractive manner. Despite what cynics may say, the motion picture business of today is normal. Certainly none are so artless they will compare the money-mad era of '18, '19 and '20 with latter day conditions to refute this statement. Those were not normal times.

It was during this golden era that many exhibitors erred. Expensive prologues, mammoth orchestras, elaborate programs and costly souvenirs were dispensed with lavish hand—a tribute to the management's generosity, but soon forgotten.

The evil effect of this extravagance is now making itself felt.

Today, when patronage must be fought for, these exhibitors find their ammunition exhausted. They "shot their bolt" when unnecessary.

Regardless, however, of the financial condition of a theatre, the watchword today is ECONOMY, and by this is meant sane saving. The process of retrenchment is limited to certain lines. Some luxuries can be cut off, labor bills reduced to an extent and bonuses discontinued. The wage of some employes is fixed by contract and naturally cannot be affected immediately, nor is it wise to economize in a way that is apparent to the patronage. Attractive illumination must be maintained, proper advertising sustained or even increased and exploitation ideas that are novel rather than expensive must be brought into play and in new fields of endeavor.

There must be no letting down in the element of attraction, but rather a "buckling down" to hard work to pull them in.

Rentals must be reduced and the foisting of inferior products on exhibitors, because the latter's contract calls for so many releases, must stop.

We are not blinded to changed conditions, but we think business today is normal and prospects for greater success brighter. Those who erred in thinking the inflation of the past three years a normal standard most naturally will suffer, as will those who erected theatres during that period with an idea the condition was a stable one. For those, however, who have provided for the change, strict attention to business will bring in big reward. Competition of the weakling is certain to vanish.

I have made it a rule to use the two hands the Lord provided me with in the management of our theatres. One hand I have kept on the quality of the entertainment I offered and the other on the pulse of the public. I have always found that an eye on the box office receipts is sufficient.

Optimism I possess and insist upon my employes, advertising and exploitation radiating it. A manager's pessmism is felt by a patron on entering a theatre and it evidences itself elsewhere. I have made it my litany that hard times are not here, but easy times have passed. The possibilities of the motion picture industry have just been scratched on the surface. Like the gold-hunters of '49, for those of us who have the hardihood and will power to dig deeper, great shall be the prize. To those of us who are not afraid of hard work has been given the privilege of "carrying on" and we shall live to see an exemplification of the real showman's motto, "Every crowd has a silver lining."

Service Wins at the Lindell

A THEATRE has just two things to sell. One is entertainment, the other is service. A theatre that sells poor entertainment with poor service is a poor theatre. But a theatre that sells good entertainment with excellent service is a first-class theatre. Radiate the spirit that each new guest is just as valuable as an old guest. For each new guest is an old guest in the making and we should all do our part in making this old guest want to come back.

Any manager can fill his house when he has an "Old Nest" or "Over the Hill," but what will keep him open when he has nothing out of the ordinary.

Give them service and they will come to see the bad ones as well as the good ones.

I believe in exploitation when you have something out of the ordinary, but to exploit a picture that will please only fifty per cent and do a nice business is really hurting your house, because perhaps the next time you want to tell them about a really good picture they will not believe you.

Play for the Feminine's Favor

Give a woman something for nothing and you'll be surprised!

The middle of last September I was transferred from Cedar Rapids, Iowa, to the Strand in Waterloo, Iowa, a quarter-of-a-million-dollar theatre and the newest of the string owned by the Ford-Diebold-Blank syndicate. It was less than a year old, had every modern equipment, beautiful lighting effects and the best service money could buy.

Waterloo had a population of 36,000 before the industrial depression; a manufacturing city with 198 factories making farm machinery and accessories almost exclusively. Naturally, when the farmer stopped buying, the factories closed. All the idle who could leave the city conveniently sought employment elsewhere; those who remained curtailed their luxuries, and those with jobs were asked to contribute one per cent of their monthly wages toward the support of those less fortunate.

In the face of these conditions I was sent to Waterloo with instructions: "Get the nut down or increase receipts."

I looked the theatre over. An expensive orchestra had been retired by my predecessor and pipe organ alone was being used. All employes whose services could be dispensed with or whose duties could be performed with extra effort on the part of a smaller staff had been dismissed. There was no possible chance to save on current or film rentals. It seemed everything had been done to get the cut down before I took charge, so I chose the alternative of increasing receipts.

My first effort was to build a beautiful atmospheric lobby with expensive furniture and toys borrowed from merchants. Citizens hadn't seen anything like it before; they didn't understand what it meant. They didn't pass inside. When the luxurious lobby failed to attract, I tried another kind. I burlesqued a kitchen, using dilapidated furniture. One kindly old lady looked at a boiler of clothes steaming on the stove and asked what kind of soap I was demonstrating. I even tried to appeal to the artistic and the cultured by having an artist do an oil painting in the Strand lobby of a famous actress. The public didn't seem to get the idea. But the fire chief and building inspector did—to the extent of reducing my space for lobby display to an area so small that further effort in this direction was discouraged.

I tried Saturday morning dime matinees endorsed by the Woman's Club but didn't gross enough to pay the express on the films.

Newspapers were filled with the Arbuckle case. Several other sensational deaths, divorces and scandals in the movie colony broke at the same time. People grew disgusted; receipts took a sudden slump instead of an increase. At this juncture the preachers took up the scandal end of the industry, hired some evangelists and reformers and began agitation for Sunday closing. Theatres were termed the origin of vice and crime and pictures the agent of the Russian bolshevists. People were ashamed to patronze a playhouse. A special election was called to close theatres on Sundays. And receipts continued to slump.

It looked as though one couldn't even give his show away. I determined to try it. But I had a mercenary motive; I wanted my act of charity to carry a profit-sharing coupon. First, I boosted my prices from 30 and 35 cents to 35 and 40 cents. Then from a telephone directory I got a dandy mailing list. To every home that boasted a telephone I sent a pass good for one, addressing same to the lady of the house. I knew few women cared to attend a theatre alone and I didn't use a mailing list from the city directory because I argued any one able to support a telephone under present conditions could afford to buy an extra ticket for a friend. A letter went with each pass telling the good points about the Strand. Did the invitations work? They did!

Eighty-two per cent of those who received passes bought one or more additional admission.

Hundreds who had never been in the house before used the passes. The theatre and the pictures were found to be high class; new customers were won; receipts nearly doubled and the good will thus established went far in winning the election for the open Sunday, which carried by a majority of 1250.

Kill the Bunk and Wake Up

WAKE up to the fact that the game is not the same—probably never will be.

Obtain the biggest productions that are available to you.

Raise the price of admission for great big production—don't be afraid.

Keep up the quality of your show—don't let your patrons see that you are weakening.

Large ads will bring large returns, if your program backs up your ad.

Incite comment about your theatre and show, in every legitimate manner.

Kill all your old time "bunko" ideas—they won't go nowadays.

Evade exaggeration in your publicity or sure death will follow.

Hospitality should be preached and drilled, more than ever before, to every employee.

Examine closely every invoice for supplies—see if you can't economize on them.

Lead your community in everything that is public-spirited and patriotic.

Last but not least—DO NOT LOSE YOUR NERVE—face the music!

Coupon Books Did It

I one day stood at the window of my Portland office and looked out with unseeing eyes. Reports from "J. and V. H." houses all showed that business conditions were not as fine as speakers of the Rotary or Ad club declared. Business was decidedly off.

"There must be a way out," I thought to myself.

"I've got the theatres, I've got the pictures. Our prices are reasonable and our success has been made through the efficient service and business system which is already installed in every house.

"I must have more patrons. But how am I going to draw them in when all these qualifications of pictures, houses and service are o.k.?"

Just then my brown study was interrupted by a voice and I turned to see entering the office a man whose sample cases immediately identified him as a traveling salesman. Conventional introductions followed and then: "I've got a sweetheart and I've got a mother," the man was explaining. "Now, I'm on the road a good deal, and even when I'm in town I'm so busy that I don't always manage to take those two girls to the movies as much as they would like. Of course, they can always take themselves but they're my girls and I want them to feel that it's my treat. Now, can you fix me up with some tickets, already paid for and good for any time?"

The result of that inquiry was the issuance of 1000 Jensen and Von Herberg admission books and the return to normalcy of the Portland houses where the experiment was tried.

The admission books sell for $5 each. Their value is $5.35 as an extra bonus is given when after all coupons are torn out the book cover is presented. This bonus may be exchanged for one or more tickets not to exceed 35 cents in value.

To be in 100 per cent harmony with the federal income department it was necessary to label the coupons "good for" 25, 10 or 5 cents according to the denomination of the coupons. To be strictly honest the word "ticket" does not once appear for the coupons are in reality exchanged at the cashier's for the regulation tickets which are dated and stamped as the government requires.

Four pages of pink 25 cent coupons, six pages of green 5 cent coupons and four pages of yellow 10 cent tickets fill the books. On the last page of tickets the last coupon is labeled "the special coupon" and it with the book cover entitled the holder to the 35 cent bonus.

Sale of the admission books which are to be used at any time, is being launched as a Christmas gift campaign. An attractive holly wreathed envelope with holiday to be used at any time, is being launched as a Christmas gift campaign. An attractive holly wreathed envelope with holiday greetings and space for the donor's and receiver's names, is being given with each book.

The books and their gay envelopes are being advertised by three slides appearing at each show on each of the five Portland houses where the tickets will be honored and by a short line or note carried at the bottom of every theatre newspaper ad. The house organ, Screenland, will carry stories concerning the little booklets.

Every time a book is sold, the money received is placed in a central trust fund and when a house exchanges regular tickets for coupons, they are entitled to money from the trust fund. The books were placed on sale the last week of November and are selling much faster than was anticipated owing to several weeks yet before the Christmas shopping activities. So keen is the Portland interest in these books that A. H. McDonald of the Castle and Rex theatres of Eugene, Ore., is having a similar enterprise launched as is J. G. Von Herberg for the Seattle, Jensen and Von Herberg theatres. San Francisco theater men also contemplate putting similar books on the market prior to the yuletide holidays.

Admission books, C. S. Jensen believes, will do much toward stimulating theatre business. In the first place, admission books instead of a box of candy or handkerchiefs will be found on many a Christmas tree. In the second place, in selling an admission book, the theatre and its use has been sold and thereupon theatre going no longer is a haphazard affair for owners of admission become regular patrons and eagerly consult ad and amusement boxes to see what shows they are entitled to. Thirdly, many books will be sold and either lost or rarely used.

THE EXHIBITOR TELLS HIS STORY

"There have been two notable examples of producers making a clean picture out of what might have been very lurid material. I refer to 'The Affairs of Anatol,' and 'The Sheik.' In both instances the producer steered clear of passages in the books which were susceptible of positively vulgar interpretation and rewrote the story so as to substitute something clean and beautiful."

By CHAS. SWEETON

Majestic Theatre, Evansville, Ind.

IF the depression had not come or had been delayed for a few years the motion picture industry would have suffered.

In the first place the methods of producers and exhibitors alike were wasteful. They were killing the goose that laid the golden egg with their disregard for expense and their lack of attention to what the public was demanding.

Producers were wasteful and tacked the cost onto the films and exhibitors, raising their prices to meet the ever-mounting costs took little cognizance of the increasing murmur of discontent on the part of the patrons of the motion picture houses.

The public was tired of paying high prices to see pictures that did not increase in quality. Any sort of a plot was slapped together and the producers depended on statements of what they had spent to produce it and on the name of the star to get it over.

That condition has been undergoing a rapid change in the last few months. Noted authors have been engaged and today the leading producers have adopted a policy, "the story is the thing." That means the exhibitor will benefit.

Then in former days the exhibitor did nothing in the way of pushing a picture except to advertise, perhaps in his local newspapers. He had the patronage, anyway, and did not need to worry. You cannot blame the exhibitor for this situation, it was natural.

However, with the depression, the art of exploiting a picture is coming into its own. As a result the motion picture theatres of the country are building up an entirely new clientele, a new class of patrons, and this new class of patrons will mean much to the theatres when normal days return.

I believe the depression period is practically at an end. Reports from industrial concerns, of Evansville, at least, show a rapid resumption of work. As men go to work they will begin patronage of motion picture houses again.

But, I want to warn the exhibitors and the producers, the men who go back to work are doing it at decreases in salary. As a result they will demand better pictures at prices they can meet than they did during the boom years.

Speaking from the angle of a town or city of less than 100,000 inhabitants, I do not believe the country is ripe for $2 motion picture features. For one thing the exhibitors in the small towns do not give the proper presentation. They do not offer prologues or make special efforts, as a rule, to give real musical programs with the big features.

By GEORGE DUMOND

Loew's State Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio

THE trouble with the picture business today is the pictures. We don't have any trouble at all filling our house to the gunwales when we have a good picture. But we play to empty benches when we have a mediocre picture. What's the answer? Why it's simply this: there are too few good pictures and too many mediocre pictures. Of course someone will say that more so-called big pictures have been released this than ever before in the history of the industry. But what happens to those big pictures? They are labeled super-specials. They go out either as road shows or they play only those houses which will run two shows a day at advanced prices. There isn't a look-in for the house with a set policy of playing one picture a week at an established set price for admission like the State. These super-specials of today are nothing more than the excellent program pictures of yesterday. Yesterday, however, the regular movie houses showed those pictures. Today they are shown only in super-special houses at super-special prices. That's the biggest trouble with the motion picture industry today, and the remedy is to go back to yesterday's policy of showing good pictures at popular prices, according to motion picture policies.

Good pictures have always brought good business to the State theatre. Give us more good pictures and we'll continue to do good business.

There's another reason why the big motion picture theatre of today neds the biggest pictures on the market in order to be profitable. With an unalterable policy as to admission and bookings, we are forced to resort to volume of business for our profit. These big super-specials cost more than the regular release. All right. We can't make up the difference between the cost of the special and the ordinary picture by cutting down either in our service or in our efficiency. Overhead remains just as high. Our only chance to make any money, then, is to have the big attractions which draw volume. We have had good weeks this fall. But every one of them marks the showing of a special. I know I am voicing the sentiments of every exhibitor when I claim a prior right to the so-called super-specials.

By P. E. ESSICK

Manager of the Rialto Theatre, Cleveland

ON the whole, business has been pretty good. Some weeks have been bad. But just as many have been good, so take it all in all, the average is on the sunny side. What's been the matter with the bad weeks? Well, to tell the truth, I think it was bad booking judgment in many cases. But of course hind sight is much easier than foresight. On looking over the bookings I can see where I booked pictures for four days that would have stood up fine for a whole week. Again, I see where, on split weeks, I played the wrong picture the wrong half of the week. Of course, our patrons are discerning, these days. They know the good pictures on the market. And they know when we have the big pictures. It isn't the admission prices that our patrons watch, but our features. Lower admission prices of competitive houses have never affected our business when we had the right attraction. So, to my way of thinking, the remedy for present conditions is greater attention on the part of the exhibitor to the kind of attraction he offers his audiences. There is more need for expert showmanship in the motion picture industry today than ever before.

By FRANK L. NEWMAN

Owner of the Newman Theatre, Kansas City, Mo.

CONDITIONS at present are undoubtedly bad. The year, however, has been fair, but the future does not look exceptionally bright. The trend of public desire in pictures seems to lean more towards the "human humor" side; more suspense and conditions that the audience knows to be true to life. Directors should see to it that pictures appeal more to the masses than to the select few. To bring about a closer harmony between distributors, exchanges and exhibitors, I would suggest that all three parties strive more for a better understanding of each other—work together for a common cause for the betterment of the industry.

"Who Won 5% Film Rental Repeal?" Controversy Brings Answers from Both Sides

IN connection with the controversy as to who is really responsible for winning the repeal of the five per cent rental tax, there is submitted by the headquarters of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry a letter from Senator Reed Smott in which the Senator, addressing William A. Brady, president of the National Association, acknowledges the assistance rendered in securing the repeal of the rental tax. The letter reads as follows:

"DEAR MR. BRADY:

"It has just come to my attention that one of the several hundred formal letters bearing my signature and acknowledging communications which thank me for my work in bringing about a repeal of the five per cent film rental tax, is being given wide publicity, apparently for personal advantage or for the purpose of furthering factional advantages, by one of the several hundred individuals to whom the same letter was sent.

"The assistance I received from you and your associates in the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry was invaluable, and the facts and convincing reasons you set forth assisted greatly in winning the very close fight in Committee.

"I do not recall any detailed information received from anyone representing the motion picture industry, other than yourself, Mr. Saul Rogers and Mr. Jack Connolly, either before or during the hearings and final action on this tax.

"Sincerely yours,
(Signed) "REED SMOOT."

From the offices of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, the following statement, designated as a "Statement issued by M. J. O'Toole, member of the Legislative Committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, and associated with the Comerford Circuit of theatres at Scranton, Pa.," was issued in connection with the controversy:

"Relative to the statements made by William A. Brady in connection with the repeal of the Five Per Cent Film Tax in the special session of Congress, I secured permission personally from Senator Reed Smoot on November 23 to have our National Organization use his letter to President Sydney S. Cohen, in a public way, and I immediately wired the permission to our National Headquarters. This letter to Mr. Cohen expressed the gratification of the Senator at being able to serve the Motion Picture Theatre Owners in the repeal of the tax. President Cohen called me by telephone at Washington and asked me to see Senator Smoot and secure his permission to use the letter. I met Senator Smoot in the reception room for visitors on the Senate Floor of the Capitol shortly before the adjournment of the Special Session and he readily tendered his permission to have the letter used.

"Sometime previous to this, I met William A. Brady in the office of National President Cohen, and in discussing the situation, Mr. Brady said there was no further use for him or other producers going to Washington to make any moves in the matter of tax repeals, as the members of Congress and the Senate would not pay any attention to them, as they want to know all the time what the exhibitor wants. Then addressing Mr. Cohen direct, Mr. Brady said, 'Sydney, the next time I go to Washington you must come with me. There is no use going there for any of this work without being able to speak for the exhibitor and you must come with me.'

"Mr. Brady then mentioned that he did not think there was any chance to repeal the Film Tax or any other taxes on the industry and expressed utter inability again to make any moves in the matter. He said that he wanted Mr. Cohen to take charge of the situation as he (Brady) and his associates could do nothing.

"Then Mr. Cohen showed Mr. Brady some confidential letters from some of the members of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America throughout the country relative to this taxation matter and Mr. Brady (after looking at them curiously for sometime) addressed Mr. Cohen and myself, saying, 'Well, it looks as if there will be a repeal of the tax.'

"It is plain that Mr. Brady nor his associates were in no position to secure any favor from Congress as was evidenced in the debate in the Senate on November 1, when Senator Smoot, Senator McCumber and others expressed a disposition to place any tax that would stick on the producers, if they could prevent it being passed on to the exhibitor, declaring that they wanted to save the exhibitor from this tax burden. (Editorial Note: An excerpt from the Congressional Record containing this conversation was submitted with this statement.)

"Yet this controversy lacks real point in the fact that results are what we are after. As expressed by Mr. Cohen in recent meetings of exhibitors at Toledo, Chicago, Milwaukee, Peoria and Boston, we are not particular who or what interest accomplished the repeal of the Film Tax as long as it has been repealed and the exhibitors saved this burdensome war tax. It seems utterly absurd in the face of the facts, evidenced in Mr. Brady's statements to myself and Mr. Cohen, expressing his hopeless feeling over the repeal of any tax and his lack of knowledge of what had already happened in the Senate, as well as the statements made in the Senate debate of November 1, and finally in Senator Smoot's letter to Mr. Cohen, for Mr. Brady or any person associated with him to claim any credit for the repeal of this tax. If, however, in the face of facts they insist they were parties to it, let their empty claims stand. Results mean most to the exhibitor and industry as a whole and bickerings of this kind on Mr. Brady's part simply serve to confuse and have no constructive value."

Statement Issued by Head of Ohio Exhibitor Body

The following statement has been issued by Martin G. Smith, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Ohio, in connection with the Ohio exhibitors' convention held on December 12th and 13th at Toledo, where a merger of the two former Ohio exhibitors' organizations was effected:

"The exhibitors of Ohio answered the call for an all Ohio State organization. Every exhibitor received two letters at intervals descriptive of the object and purpose of the convention. They were familiar with the details of the business at hand.

"Almost two-thirds of the theatres of Ohio answered on two separate postcards giving authority to proceed with plans as outlined. One negative answer only was received. The balance were "yes," and most of them emphatically so. Many supplementary letters were of the same trend.

"Fourteen Congressional districts of the twenty-two in Ohio were represented in person by exhibitors, from as far away as the Northeastern border and down along the Ohio River, two hundred and fifty miles away from Toledo. It was a representative gathering, with no outside entertainment attractions as are usually staged at such gatherings—it was purely a business proposition.

"The exhibitors who responded by mail, or in person, meant business and the officers elected interpret this attitude as a mandate to function without delay by deeds and not with words.

"I personally so interpret that mandate and feel a corresponding responsibility as President of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Ohio, honored as the unanimous choice of the Toledo convention of December 12th and 13th, 1921, when the merger of the two former State bodies was accomplished without a discordant note. This mandate I also interpret means that past differences, both personal and sectional, must be forgotten—there must be no north, no south, no east, no west; our problems are State wide. Ohio must be solidly organized from Cincinnati to Conneaut—and from Bridgeport to Bryan—including every intervening county and legislative district—thus insuring Ohio's hearty co-operation with National President Sydney S. Cohen and the officers of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, and thus assist materially in finishing the business in hand at Washington. We take it that no exhibitor can be unappreciative of what has been recently accomplished at Washington in the repeal of the Five Per Cent Film Tax and the ten per cent tax on admissions of ten cents.

"In conclusion, to the exhibitor who asks "What are you going to do for me?" we simply say—first, enroll your theatre as a member, and our slogan being 'AN INJURY TO ONE IS THE CONCERN OF ALL,' we will try to take care of you as one of the exhibitor family. Conditions of membership will be known to every exhibitor shortly, and in the meantime, all inquiries will receive prompt attention from this office. We are working hard to clear up the mass of correspondence and details incidental to the convention and soon will be able to function one hundred per cent for every exhibitor."

Texas Franchise Holders Elect Advisory Board

The local "get together" of the First National franchise holders of Texas—one of the most important of all the regional meetings on account of the difficulties confronting the Southwestern exhibitors—was held at the Adolphus Hotel, Dallas, Texas, on Dec. 15. So delighted were the franchise holders present with the conduct and results of the "get together" that several suggested a quarterly meeting of the same kind.

The election of an advisory board was the signal for a display of enthusiasm that halted the proceedings for a few minutes. Five men were elected, with F. R. Newman of the Crystal Theatre, Greenville, as chairman. His four associates are W. R. Fairman, of the Queen, Bryant; C. J. Musselman, Grand Theatre, Paris; Abe Levy, Strand, Waco, and L. A. Holton, Pierce Theatre, Port Arthur.

Meetings will be held on the third Wednesday in every month, at Dallas, beginning with January 18.

Will Hays to Head New National Association, According to Despatches

IN a dispatch to the Hearst newspapers on Tuesday of this week, the Universal Service office in Washington, D. C., declared that a close friend of Postmaster General Will Hays had confirmed the report that Mr. Hays had accepted the offer to head the new producers and distributors' organization which will succeed the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. Mr. Hays will resign from the Cabinet to enter upon his new office, according to the dispatch. The contract, it is understood, calls for Mr. Hays presiding as chief executive of the new motion-picture organization for a period of two and a half years.

Efforts to reach the Postmaster-General by long-distance telephone from the M. P. News office brought the reply that Mr. Hays was not in Washington at present, having departed on a two-weeks vacation. No confirmation of the report could be secured from within the industry.

The Universal Service dispatch follows in part:

"Confirmation of reports that Postmaster-General Will Hays will resign from the Cabinet to head a big motion picture concern was given to Universal Service by one of Mr. Hays' close friends.

"Mr. Hays is taking a brief rest. It was stated at the Post Office Department that he will not return to Washington until after the Christmas holidays. It is expected that on his return he will make formal announcement of his resignation from the Cabinet.

"Mr. Hays and his assistants in the Post Office Department have consistently refused to confirm or deny the rumor of his resignation, which has been going the round of official Washington for the past two weeks. It was not until now that one of his close personal friends, in touch with the Postmaster-General, confirmed the report."

Perfecting Details for New York Convention

Chairmen of Various Committees for Exhibitor Gathering Named at Managers' Meeting

PLANS for the coming annual Convention of the Motion Picture Theatres Owners of New York State, in Albany, February 14, 15 and 16, are rapidly assuming definite shape. A meeting of the Albany Managers' association was held Friday afternoon of last week, at which time President George Roberts announced the following chairmen of the respective committees: Entertainment, O. H. Stacy; programme, Harry Helman; printing, Fred Elliott; ball, Samuel Suckno; music, Harry Lazarus; banquet, William Berinstein; publicity, Fred Elliott. The remainder of each committee will be made up of all of the members of the Albany Managers' association.

Friday's meeting followed the return to Albany of George Roberts and Samuel Suckno, from a three days' conference in New York with Charles O'Reilly, president of the state association; William Brandt, of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce, and others on matters relating to the Convention.

The convention will devote all three days to business matters between 9 and 4 o'clock. The entertainment features will come in the evenings. It has been decided to eliminate the proposed trip of inspection to the General Electric Works in Schenectady, it being figured that this would consume at least seven hours' time.

The motion picture ball will be held on the second evening of the Convention. There will be music furnished by sixty pieces, playing thirty at a time, in order that there may be no intermission between dances. This will be the largest combined band and orchestra at a ball in Albany's history.

At least $1,500 will be spent in decorating the State Armory for the ball. There will be a reception committee of twelve persons. Mae Murray, Eugene O'Brien and other stars in the East have already promised to attend.

The banquet will be held on the roof garden of the Hotel Ten Eyck on the evening of February 16. Reservations will be limited to 450. President O'Reilly will preside. The list of speakers will be made up by President O'Reilly and his associates. There will be at least a dozen of these including Sydney S. Cohen, president of the National Association; Dr. Francis Holley, of the Bureau of Commercial Economics, Washington, D. C.; Senator James J. Walker, and others.

Wives of members of the Albany Managers' association will next week be named as a committee to entertain all women attending the convention. There will be automobile rides, luncheons as well as a dinner on the second day of the convention.

The committee on arrangements has named Samuel I. Berman, secretary of the state association, to have charge of the all exchanges, at the convention. These booths will be placed in the tea-room immediately off the main lobby of the hotel.

The convention will be opened by Mayor-elect William Hackett. It is now expected that the attendance will reach at least 900. Business sessions will be held in one of the private ball rooms of the Hotel Ten Eyck.

Million Dollar Finance Corporation Formed

Will Finance Stars and Directors of Repute Who Have Definite Releasing Contracts

FILM production on the West Coast so far as independents are concerned is to receive a substantial stimulus as the result of the formation of a million dollar corporation organized for the purpose of financing stars and directors of recognized standing, having releasing contracts with distributing organizations.

Facts concerning this latest cinema project were given out this last week from the offices of the California Commissioner of Corporations where papers were filed with a capitalization of $1,000,000.

The new organization will be known as the National Motion Picture Finance Corporation. While no Los Angeles bankers appear as officers or directors on the official records, it is reported that not less than two Southern California banking institutions have agreed to lend their support to the proposition.

Canadian, Eastern, Middle West and Pacific Coast capital apparently heads the enterprise for Laurence A. Lambert, for many years an executive of the Canadian Pacific Railway is named as president; Karl Merris, former general manager of the Decatur Fountain Company, owned and operated by a million dollar company, is vice-president; William W. Damron, president of the Industrial Manufacturing Company of Kansas City, is vice-president; Alfred G. Roberts, retired president of Gillette, Gibson & Company and vice-president of the Sunkist Candy Company of Los Angeles, is another vice-president; R. L. Garuthers, former secretary of the Green Ridge Coal Company of Oklahoma, is secretary, and R. J. Schroeder, more recently vice-president of the Farmers' and Merchants' Bank of Independence, Mo., is treasurer.

President Lambert has been recently identified with Los Angeles business circles as the president of the Financial Loan and Investment Company.

R. C. Millard, for several years comptroller of Universal City, and recognized as one of the country's most adept cinema accountants, has been chosen auditor. F. D. R. Moote and E. S. Patterson have been retained as legal advisors.

With the formation of this newest organization the picture industry will have two fiscal allies in the financing of independent production. The success made by the Cinema Finance Corporation is said to have made it possible to interest capital in another such project. The former organization which has done much toward keeping Los Angeles the center of the screen world had associated with it such men as John E. Barber of the First National Bank of Los Angeles; John B. Miller, president of the Southern California Edison Company; Motley H. Flint; Dan Murphy, wealthy oil operator, and others.

According to President Lambert, the new organization will not encourage wild cat production. An advisory council is to be formed that will pass on the merits of every proposition before a penny is advanced. This will be made up of experts in production, exhibition, exploitation, story values, and other necessary lines to estimate in advance the possible returns from every picture.

In no instance will more than seventy-five percent of the cost of a production be advanced, and then only when the producing company has a specific contract for the release of its pictures.

The National Motion Picture Finance Corporation is not an overnight organization. For several months Mr. Lambert and his associates have been in Los Angeles making an exhaustive canvass of the field and holding conferences with studio executives, directors, stars, and exhibitors, as well as local bankers, and the formation of the N. M. P. F. C. is the result of exhaustive study and careful thought.

In discussing the proposition, Mr. Lambert said:

"I believe that when the moneyed men of America awaken to the possibilities of large profits with absolute safeguards for their investments in the financing of motion pictures under proper supervision, that the independent producer who is on the level and has a picture to make for which there is a national demand, will have no difficulty in securing the necessary financial assistance.

"When you consider that the motion picture industry is the first largest here, with an annual production of $150,000,000.00 and the fourth largest industry in America with a gross volume of $800,000,000 annually—and look at the profits that have been made—it is surprising that money should be scarce at this time. The condition is the result of the extravagance, inefficiency and often dishonesty of the unsupervised wild cat producer and the recent lull we have had I am inclined to believe has weeded out most of his ilk and made the motion picture world safe for profit seeking capital."

Illinois Exhibitors Hold Lively Convention

Among the Most Successful of Organization's History as to Attendance and Enthusiasm

THE Illinois Motion Picture Theatre Owners Convention, held last week at the Hotel Jefferson, Peoria, was one of the most successful in the history of the organization both in point of enthusiasm and attendance.

President Sidney S. Cohen of the national organization, and Senator James J. Walker were on hand to address the meetings and were given warm welcome by exhibitors, who passed resolutions of confidence in these leaders and thanked them for their personal sacrifices and work, which they are doing so well for the organization.

Mayor Michels, of Peoria, personally appeared before the convention and welcomed the exhibitors to his city, giving high praise to Dee Robinson and the other theatre owners of Peoria, and declaring himself opposed to censorship, blue laws, and Sunday closing.

Responses to the address of welcome were made by Joe Hopp and Mike O'Toole, of Scranton, Pennsylvania.

President Cohen made an interesting address at the morning session, and at the afternoon meeting Senator Walker was the principal speaker.

At the first session the following committees were named: Resolutions committee, W. D. Burford, chairman; organization, W. W. Watts, chairman; ways and means, K. Fitzpatrick, chairman, and constitution and by-laws, B. McElroy, chairman.

Resolutions passed included the following:

That the next convention of the Illinois Motion Picture Theatre be held at Chicago in April;

That the executive committee be authorized to invite the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America to hold that organization's national convention in Chicago in May, 1922;

A resolution which declared the playing of pictures on percentage basis should be discouraged;

A resolution approving of the action of the officers and executive committee of the M. P. T. O. A. in instituting an investigation of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., and pledging the moral and financial support of the Illinois Motion Picture Theatre Owners to such an investigation.

Plans for an active campaign to increase the membership and strengthen the efficiency of the organization were outlined by the committee on organization, which is headed by W. W. Watts and which includes D. Robinson and J. J. Rubens.

Independent Screen Artists' Guild Organized in Los Angeles

To Establish Direct Relations Between Coast Studios and Exhibitors

TYPIFYING the spirit of cooperation between the producers and the exhibitors of motion pictures, which has been gaining ground lately with gathering momentum, the Independent Screen Artists' Guild was organized Thursday night of last week at a meeting in the Ambassador Hotel in Los Angeles.

The charter members of the new organization consist of forty-five independent producers, stars and directors, headed by Norma Talmadge and Charles Chaplin, and it has for its object the establishment of direct relations between the Los Angeles studios and the eighteen thousand theatres in the United States.

The formation of the new association has evoked much comment and discussion. It is hailed unanimously as the forerunner of widespread and needed improvements in the machinery of picture making and picture showing, and it is predicted that the results will be revolutionary and highly beneficial.

The guild is composed exclusively of stars and producers who own their studios or have their own studio organization, and plans are now being made to perfect direct contact with the theatre owners in order to eliminate the costly middlemen and Wall Street interests. The charter is based on those of the craftsmen's guilds of the Middle Ages.

The guiding motive in the formation of the guild was the prevalent belief that the threatened cheapening of the quality of photoplays through the forced lowering of production costs could be obviated by a concerted action for more efficient production methods.

An appeal has been issued by the new guild to the independent theatre owners of the United States to set aside the week of February 18 for the simultaneous presentation throughout the country of the latest big photoplays of the independent stars and producers. The members of the organization have pledged themselves to appear in person in as many of the theatres of the country as possible for the purpose of "appearing before our friends and express the gratitude that is ours for the manner in which the kindly world has received our humble efforts."

Immediately following the meeting formulation of plans was begun, with the object of making the week of February 18 a huge success and of interesting the exhibitors throughout the country in the association.

The charter members of the guild will extend invitations to other independent stars and producers to join the organization as soon as it completes its future plans.

At the initial meeting in the Guild Hall of the Ambassador Hotel the following producers, stars, directors and other persons prominently identified with the motion picture industry were present:

Producers: Joseph M. Schenck, Thomas H. Ince, Mack Sennett, J. L. Frothingham, Allen Holubar, J. Parker Read, Jr., Maurice Tourneur, Jack Coogan, Sr., Marshall Neilan R. A. Walsh, Louis B. Mayer, John M. Stahl, Col. William N. Selig, Sol Lesser, Al and Charles Christie, Sam Rork, Richard Walton Tully, King Vidor, B. P. Shulberg, H. O. Davis and Gus Ingliss.

Stars: Norma and Constance Talmadge, Charles Chaplin, Katherine MacDonald, Anita Stewart, Dorothy Phillips, Jackie Coogan, Buster Keaton, Miriam Cooper, Florence Vidor, Carter De Haven, Flora Parker De Haven, Colleen More, Mabel Normand, Marcia Manon and Phyllis Haver.

Directors: James Young, Sidney Franklin and Hobart Henley.

Some of the other prominent invited guests were Al Lichtman, Mrs. Margaret Talmadge, Natalie Talmadge Keaton, Rudolph Cameron, Jack Morrell, M. C. Levee, John McCormick, E. V. Richards, Julian Saenger, Lou Anger, Motley H. Flint, vice-president of the Los Angeles Trust and Savings Bank, and J. D. Williams.

The purposes and aims of the Guild are explained in the following proclamation proposed by Mr. Schenck and unanimously adopted at the meeting:

"Be it known by these presents, that we, independent producers, directors and stars of that mystic realm of filmland, do hereby issue to the great American public our most hearty Christmas greetings and best wishes for a Happy New Year.

"Furthermore, by this proclamation we desire to inform all good patrons of the new art of the cinema of our earnest desire to provide for them during the coming new year, amusement feasts greater than any they have ever enjoyed before.

"There be those among us who wear cap and bells; there be those who seek to entertain while they instruct. Others there are who sit at the feet of the mighty and are known to the far corners of the earth. One and all we bespeak the kindly attention and consideration of the public during the coming year 1922.

"In the court of the arts of painting, sculpture, music, literature and drama, we of the cinema are comparative newcomers. We seek to usurp none of the older arts, but to call them to our aid in order that the public may profit. The great public which has succored the older arts can aid our newer art, too.

"We appeal to the public to continue their patronage of this new art so that it may progress and not retrograde. We appeal that the worthy may survive. That the photoplay of moral theme and artistic merit may reach greater heights.

"In return, we, independent producers, directors and stars, on this fifteenth day of December, in the year of Our Lord nineteen hundred and twenty-one, have formed an organization which shall be known as the Independent Screen Artists' Guild, whose purpose shall be an undying effort to please the public and justify the confidence which has been reposed in us.

"Let all be appraised that it shall be the sincere endeavor of the Independent Screen Artists' Guild to make bigger and better photoplays during the coming twelve months, and to aspire in all we do to surpass that which we already have done, to the end that our public shall benefit thereby.

"As evidence of the desire of the Independent Screen Artists' Guild to give of its best, its members therefore do propose to the Independent Theatres of America the national, co-operative exhibition of Guild's finest motion pictures.

"It is the Independent Theatre Owner in every city who makes it possible for us to further advance the art of the cinema by allowing us to produce our photoplays in our own studies, unhampered by any restriction. It is our public which makes it possible at the box office for theatre owners to so support the producers, stars and directors.

"We wish by our direct relations with the theatre owners to eliminate the profit of the middleman and Wall street, with the result we may be able to put our entire effort into making finer pictures with a saving to the public at the box office.

"The Independent Screen Artists' Guild, therefore, proposes as a tribute to the Independent Exhibitors and our public who have so nobly fostered our desire to advance the art of the screen, that the week of February 16 be set aside for the purpose of presenting simultaneously throughout the United States our greatest screen efforts, upon which we have toiled unceasingly many months.

"The Independent Screen Artists' Guild announces to its public that it has accepted the offer of co-operation extended by J. D. Williams, manager of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., an organization composed of thirty-five hundred independent exhibitors, which, since its inception, has faithfully and successfully

Anti-Blue Law War Is Waxing in Force

Springfield, Mo., Will Decide Sunday Issue by Ballot—Big Battle Shaping in Kansas

ACCORDING to advices from various sections of the United States and Canada the fight against the blue-law movement is steadily growing in intensity. With two victories already won in Missouri for the Sunday opening cause, the interest of the trade is now centered on Springfield, where on December 27th a referendum will be held to decide whether or not motion pictures are to be permitted on Sundays. In Kansas the exhibitors' state organization is preparing to carry their offensive against the advocates of Sunday closing and censorship to the United States Supreme Court. In Montreal, the aldermanic executive council has canceled its order to close all theatres except those presenting straight picture programs, and a permanent modification of the original drastic arrangement is looked for.

A real fight between Missouri exhibitors and "Sunless Sunday" advocates is on at Springfield, a town of 60,000 population. It is an expensive battle for the exhibitors, who are leaving no stone unturned in an effort to forever wipe out the radicalism now prevailing. The eyes of every exhibitor in Missouri are turned toward Springfield as a victory there means the third consecutive triumph of the theatre owners in the last two months. Misrepresentations and false viewpoints of the Sabbath, outlined from the pulpit, are being combatted by the exhibitors through an extensive advertising campaign in the newspapers. A referendum will be held December 27 to determine whether or not motion picture houses shall remain open on Sunday.

The outlook for Missouri exhibitors, relative to blue-law agitation and censorship, never was brighter than at the present time. What had the appearance of strong factors of opposition only a few weeks ago now has dwindled to virtually nothing. Charles D. Morris, editor and publisher of the St. Joseph (Mo.) Gazette, a strong supporter of the exhibitors, has been nominated as one of the fifteen delegates-at-large to the Missouri Constitutional convention at which a new state charter will be written.

This fact in itself is insignificant enough, but, with self-appointed reformers making a desperate effort to obtain sufficient representation to "put over" a state censorship the importance of Mr. Morris' presence at the convention cannot be overestimated. It is the delegates-at-large who will virtually control the convention. The other fourteen, selected with Mr. Morris, are believed by exhibitors to be broad-minded men too interested in the welfare of the state to be bothered with the whims of an obscure few. An editorial published by Mr. Morris on censorship recently attracted state-wide attention in exhibitor as well as reformer circles.

If necessary, the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Kansas will carry their fight against advocates of Sunday closing, under the Kansas labor law, to the United States Supreme Court according to Mr. Van Praag, president of the Kansas exhibitors' organization. In several instances exhibitors have been arrested for showing on Sunday, but are continuing to operate their theatres on Sunday, pending a hearing in their cases. All alleged violations of the labor law will be consolidated in one case Mr. Van Praag believes.

"The labor law, passed in 1886, when there were no motion picture houses, does not apply to the theares today," said Mr. Van Praag. It states that no person shall work or cause any persons to work, except in cases of necessity, on Sunday. It is an antique law and does not apply to the modern motion picture house. If it does, the law would affect street cars and other industries which are necessary to operate on Sunday. No date for a hearing on the case, which probably will be before a jury, has yet been set, but the Kansas exhibitors plan to throw their entire strength into the fight and feel confident of victory."

The aldermanic executive council of the Montreal civic administration has reconsidered its order to close all theatres on Sundays with the exception of those presenting straight moving picture programs, with the result that the order has been entirely canceled. The civic officials held several conferences with local theatre managers, after which it was decided on December 15 to pry the lid off once more, the only provision being that the theatres were to be careful not to offer any vaudeville specialty or film production that might offend the feelings of Sunday theatregoerss. The situation was cleared, it is understood, by the voluntary offer of the Gayety Theatre management to discontinue burlesque performances on Sundays, and the managers of moving picture and vaudeville theatres also gave their promise that they would not offer anything "noisy" or of a burlesque type in the Sunday performances.

Voices Brighter Outlook for Export Business

John Cecil Graham Discusses Effects of the Washington Conference on Film Exports

IMPROVEMENT in European exchange rates already made and further development which is contingent upon the successful solution of some of the important problems now before the Disarmament Conference at Washington promise much for the future of the film industry, not only in Great Britain but on the Continent as well, in the opinion of John Cecil Graham, General Foreign Representative of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, who reached New York Friday, December 9th, on his annual business trip. He will spend several weeks at the home office of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in a series of conferences on the European film situation with E. E. Shauer, director of the foreign department.

"While there is no immediate promse of speedy improvemen' in the European film industry as it affects the American export business, there is a promise of better things to come within the next two years," said Mr. Graham. "Inasmuch as the depressed condition of the various European money values has served as a big handicap to American exporters, the rapid improvement in British, French and other European exchange should be accepted as an encouraging sign for the future. Should the Washington conference be successful in relieving European and other governments of some of their great armament burdens, business undoubtedly will be stimulated and the exchange of those countries hardest hit by deflation undoubtedly will make more rapid strides toward recovery.

"Physical changes in the British industry have not been numerous. Except for the completion of those theatres for which licenses are obtained before the war, there has been little theatre building. I do not believe the problems brought about by the shortage of theatres will be solved in fewer than three to five years. This applies also to France, Germany and other European countries.

"The British exhibitor is confronted with about the same problem as that facing the American exhibitor. Indiscriminate booking of pictures during the wild scramble for pictures during the last few years has brought him face to face with the necessity of supplying better entertainment for a more discriminating public.

"The advance booking problem is not so acute as it was a year or more ago, due in a large measure to the fact that the peak of the great film load which poured in upon Great Britain was passed some

"Foolish Wives" Opens in New York Jan. 8th

Will Not Be Road-Showed; Arrangements Under Way for Openings in 33 Big Cities

"FOOLISH WIVES" will open at the Central Theatre, New York City, on January 8th. The release date of January 15th has been set by Universal Film as the official one. The picture will not be "road-showed," and arrangements are now being negotiated in thirty-three cities for first-run showing of the picture in the regular motion picture houses. Following these runs, the picture will be offered to the smaller houses. Except for the showing at the Central Theatre, New York, the picture will not be exploited further. Universal executives are convinced that the production has already received an unusual measure of exploitation and that further efforts along these lines would simply retard the submission of the picture to the country's exhibitors.

Carl Laemmle, in a statement issued this week from the Universal headquarters, declares that Universal will stand by its promise made last August to the exhibitors of the country through Vice-President R. H. Cochrane that "Foolish Wives" will not be "road-showed," but will be offered to exhibitors as direct and as soon as possible. Mr. Laemmle says:

"I have determined to renew and confirm the promise made by Mr. R. H. Cochrane and for reasons that have seemed good to hundreds of very big exhibitors, who have both told me personally and written to me, I have decided to forego the pleasure of exploiting "Foolish Wives" ourselves except in the one instance of the Central Theatre in New York City. The lease of this theatre was secured for the express purpose of showing this super-jewel picture, and it has been thought wise to follow out our own original plan in this case.

"In regard to all the other cities, we have determined to give the biggest exhibitors in each city the opportunity to book "Foolish Wives" in preference to giving it to legitimate houses, where it might be played for longer runs and be kept away from the great body of exhibitors for months and months.

"We have selected thirty-three cities in the United States in which to offer the first showing of "Foolish Wives" in picture houses. Not until the run is over there will it be shown in the lesser theatres. We have a special corps of men who will call on all the first run exhibitors in these cities at once and arrange dates and exhibition problems. We have virtually accepted several offers where the dates were satisfactory to us.

"Foolish Wives" in its final form will be in fourteen reels. We have tried various other lengths and since we have waited so long for the picture we have not been in a mood to take any chances on a cutting which did not preserve all the virility and smoothness of the wonderful story and atmosphere. The picture I have just seen is so rippingly smooth in its development, so gorgeously exquisite in its artistry, so powerful in its character analysis, so gripplingly full of suspense and so smashing in its climaxes that I take the utmost pride in offering it as the best answer to those carping critics who recently declared moving pictures to be a failure as a vehicle of artistic expression.

"The release date of January 15th has been set as the official one but the picture will be shown at the Central Theatre on January 8th.

The determination not to exploit "Foolish Wives" any further except in the case of the Central Theatre showing is said to have been reached as the result of arguments against further exploitation by a number of prominent exhibitors. These men have all been against having the Universal exploit the picture before they had it. They argue that "Foolish Wives" has exploited itself for almost two years. There is scarcely a man, woman, or child who does not know about it, they declared. Since Universal has promised to give "Foolish Wives" direct to exhibitors, they argued, why not give it without any strings at all? As it is universally admitted that exhibitors are making money today only on big productions, why not let them have an unembarrassed opportunity to make this exploitation money in addition, even though it is necessary to charge more for the picture?"

These personal arguments and the many letters he has received have had the effect of convincing Mr. Laemmle that "Foolish Wives" has actually had all the exploitation that is necessary and that there is therefore no reason why exhibitors should not get "Foolish Wives" as direct and as soon as possible.

Wire Briefs from Coast

ELLIOTT HOWE, who completed work as co-director of "Wildfire" for Ben Hampton, died of heart failure last Saturday night.

Ferdinand Earle has sent notice to exhibitors that he owns the copyright on "The Rubaiyat" and that he has brought suit to enjoin the Rubaiyat, Incorporated, from releasing, distributing, or exhibiting a motion-picture of that name.

J. D. Williams left Los Angeles for New York on Friday of last week.

Realart has been merged with Famous Players-Lasky, according to telegram to H. G. Ballance, sales-manager of the Famous Players-Lasky organization. Mr. Ballance was called East, making it necessary for him to abandon his tour of the country at this time.

Producers and artists affiliated with First National met on December 15 at the Hotel Ambassador, Los Angeles, and made tentative plans for the organization of an indepenedent screen artists' guild. The purpose of the new association is declared to be to bring the producer, exhibitor, artist, and public closer together. Joseph Schenck acted as chairman of the meeting. Tentative plans are being made for the holding of an Exhibition Week during the week of February 18.

R. J. Tobin, vice-president and general-manager of the Robertson-Cole studios on the Coast, left for New York on Monday of this week. Mr. Tobin before his departure stated that production activities at the R-C plant will be increased during January, when Pauline Frederick, Sessue Hayakawa, Doris May, and two all-star companies will begin production of new subjects.

Heavy rain Saturday night, Sunday, and Monday did severe damage to sets all ready for the start of production work.

Realart-F.P.-Lasky Consolidation Going Forward

Consolidation of Realart with Famous Players-Lasky, begun last week, is expected to be completed by the end of the month. All of the Realart sales staff, except the managers, have been released, and most of the sixty men are reported already to have re-established themselves.

Famous Players-Lasky has assumed charge of sales and contracts, and the booking records of Realart are now being incorporated with those of the parent organization.

Several of the home-office departments, including those of the supervisor of contracts, the purchasing agent, the advertising manager and sales statistics, have been moved from 469 to 485 Fifth avenue. Some of the employees also having been temporarily transferred.

One of the managers, Walter R. Scates of Boston, has been given a place in the Famous Players-Lasky organization. He will have the Boston office. Messrs. Levine and Bullwinkle, his oldest salesmen, have entered the employ of First National in Boston territory.

President Morris Kohn is delaying development of his future plans until after the transfer of Realart has been completed.

Report has it that J. S. Woody, general manager, is contemplating the formation of a partnership, the details of which will be announced after the first of the year.

Dario L. Faralla, assistant treasurer, expects to be busy for some time closing the Realart books and will not do his planning for the future until that work is finished.

Jay A. Gove, assistant general manager, says exhibitors are co-operating enthusiastically with January bookings which are expected to make next month's rentals among the largest in the history of Realart.

John N. MacMeekin, special representative, is reported to have signed up for special work in connection with the sale of "Foolish Wives."

names are not mentioned in the electric lights. Typical examples are, Lon Chaney, Richard Dix, Wallace Beery, George Fawcett, Theodore Roberts, Raymond Hatton, James Kirkwood, Joseph King, Theodore Kosloff, T. Roy Barnes, William Mong, Marguerite de la Motte, Nigel de Brulier, Helene Chadwick, John Bowers, Cullen Landis, Harry Myers and Leatrice Joy.

The directors who have been responsible for exceptional productions are Rex Ingram (who ranks first for 1921), Marshall Neilan, Thomas Ince, Cecil de Mille, John Robertson, Emmet Flynn, Robert Vignola, Hugo Ballin, George Fitzmaurice, J. Gordon Edwards, Penrhyn Stanlaws, Maurice Tourneur and Fred Niblo. D. W. Griffith fell down terribly on his one offering, " Dream Street." Other directors who deserve citations are, Messrs. Barker, Brenon, Webb, Withey, David Smith, Baker, Leonard, W. deMille, Sennett, Browning, Beaudine, Melford, Forman, Walsh, Roach, Trimble and Hopper.

The leading figures in the comedy field in my opinion, are Buster Keaton and the bespectacled Harold Lloyd, both of whom have done consistently fine work throughout the season. Others who are not far behind are Clyde Cook, Larry Semon, Eddie Barry, Bobbie Vernon, Ben Turpin, Al St. John, Neal Burns, Lloyd Hamilton, Johnny Hines and Snub Pollard.

The literary celebrities include Rupert Hughes, Rita Weiman, June Mathis, Gouverneur Morris, Edward Knoblock, Gertrude Atherton, Mr. and Mrs. George Randolph Chester and, of course, John Emerson and Anita Loos. The last two have successfully maintained their position as the greatest scenario writers in the movies.

There is no doubt that the most important and the most interesting feature of the year has been the sudden influx of foreign films. Regardless of their commercial value, these pictures have exercised a profound influence on our producers, and they have materially affected the quality of the more recent American productions. They have taught us a great deal about composition, emotional acting, costuming and, particularly, the handling of mob scenes.

Of all the European nations, Germany has shown the most complete mastery of the art of motion picture making. " Passion," " Deception," " Gypsy Blood," " All for a Woman " and " One Arabian Night " have possessed a pictorial beauty that is all too rare in our native films. Two other German pictures, " The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari " and " The Golem " —both of them harsh, brutal dramas—introduce a new dimension to the screen, and open up a train of possibilities that is well nigh limitless.

Sweden has given us an excellent production, " Our Mutual Friend," and another not nearly so good, " You and I." Denmark's contribution consists of one ambitious film, " Hamlet," which possesses certain great merits, and certain grave defects. The same may be said of " I Accuse," which comes from France.

Italy has been more fortunate. " Theodora," a sumptuously spectacular production which bears a strong resemblance to " Quo Vadis " and " Cabiria," is one of the most successful pictures of the year.

England has shown very little to date, but " Carnival " and " The Bonnie Briar Bush " give promise of better things to come from this source.

China has not been heard from as yet, but reports are expected at any moment.

The European actors who have established reputations for themselves on this side of the Atlantic are, Pola Negri, Emil Jannings, Werner Krauss, Ernest Lubitsch and Paul Wegener, all in German productions; Asta Nielsen in the Danish " Hamlet "; Catherine Reese in " Our Mutual Friend "; Romuald Joubé and Séverin-Mars in " I Accuse "; and Mary Glynne in several of the Famous Players British films.

The ultimate conclusion is that 1921 has seen three photoplays which, in my opinion, are the best that have ever been produced—namely, " The Kid," " The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse " and " The Three Musketeers "; it has seen at least thirty more that rank well above the average; and it has seen a number of foreign importations of undeniable merit.

So that the fans have no kick coming.

Let us hope that, in 1922, the producers themselves will be similarly fortunate.

Allied Laboratories Will Hold Ball December 31

THE Grand Ball and Entertainment of the Allied Film Laboratories Association, Inc., will be held New Year's Eve, December 31, at the 12th Regiment Armory, Columbus Avenue, 61st Street, New York City. A special feature of the program will be a beauty contest, the winners of which will be given an opportunity in pictures through the courtesy of the Warner Bros. The "movie" stars in the metropolitan district are expected in force. "A good time for all," is the advance word sent out in heralding the function.

Ernest Lubitsch Arrives with New Spectacle

Ernest Lubitsch, director of " Passion " and " Deception," arrived in New York from Europe this week. He was accompanied by Paul Davidson, whose theatrical holdings extend throughout Germany, Italy, France, and Holland.

Both Mr. Lubitsch and Mr. Davidson are coming to America under the auspices of the Hamilton Theatrical Corporation to study American production methods. They brought with them a new Lubitsch production titled " Pharaoh's Wife." Some of the scenes are said to have 126,000 persons in them.

Better Export Outlook

months ago. Beginning next September British releases will be practically stabilized on a basis of a twelve months interval between trade show and release dates. During the period of the excess film supply this interval has been as long as eighteen months or more.

" Conditions in Germany are still in a chaotic state as the result of the collapse of the mark. No one seems to know just what will happen next. At the present very few American pictures are finding their way into Germany as the result of the embargo. There is the possibility that the German government will take some action next spring to remove this embargo, along the lines of reciprocity in commercial dealings.

" The recently organized French Paramount company, known as Societe Anonyme Francaise des Films Paramount, is making splendid progress. Since the first release on October 21st, Paramount bookings have increased four hundred per cent. An extensive advertising and exploitation campaign was used to launch the beginning of releasing activities. Central offices are maintained in splendid quarters in Paris at 63 Champs Elysees and a Belgian branch has been opened at Brussels. Later offices will be opened at Lille, Lyon, Marseilles and Bordeaux."

Screen Guild Formed

fostered the efforts of the independent producer, director and star.

" Besides these thirty-five hundred theatres, welded in First National's great chain, we invite every independent theatre owner in the United States to assist us to join personally with them in the desire to simultaneously lift its burden from a careworn world.

" We the Independent Screen Artists' Guild, do hereby pledge ourselves to devote the week of February 16th to our public, and throughout the United States we will appear before our friends and express the gratitude that is ours for the manner in which the kindly world has received our humble efforts."

Will Prevent Juggling of Censors' Serial Numbers

In watching out that exchanges do not attach a serial number of some film which has been passed by the New York State Motion Picture Commission to some old film, on which a permit was not sought, Ansel W. Brown, head of the Albany bureau of the commission, is checking up every film which he sees presented on his trips of inspection about the state these days. Duplicate records of all films passed by the Commission in New York have been sent on to Albany.

Explains How to Win Over Church-Going Movie Fan

At the weekly luncheon of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers held at the Cafe Boulevard in New York recently, an interesting talk was given by the Reverend Dr. William Carter, of the Throop Avenue Presbyterian Church in Brooklyn. Dr. Carter endeavored to point out how to put motion pictures over among church people. He explained that more than half of the population of the United States were church-goers.

Dr. Carter declared there were two factors which should be followed to win the confidence of the church-goer. The first, he stated, would be to take higher classical literature and capitalize upon it. Dr. Carter also impressed the fact upon his hearers that a producer should be true to the great basic thing in a story and not insult the public's intelligence by changing it to suit a star or to inject clap-trap situations to cause sensationalism.

Joint Arbitration Board of Buffalo Completed

Archie W. Moses, manager of the R-C Pictures Corporation exchange in Buffalo, has been appointed chairman of the new joint arbitration committee of the F. I. L. M. Club of Buffalo.

The other exchange men on the new committee, which was named at the meeting in the Hotel Iroquois last Monday, are: Henry W. Kahn, Metro; George Hickey, Goldwyn, and Fred Myers, Jr., Fox.

The exhibitor members are Howard J. Smith, manager of the Palace, Buffalo, and president of the Western New York unit of the M. P. T. O. A.; J. H. Michael, manager of the Regent in Buffalo, and a member of the executive committee of the state exhibitors' league, and Judge John W. Schatt of the Opera House in Gowanda, N. Y.

The club ratified the working agreement entered into in New York city recently between the F. I. L. M. Clubs and the M. P. T. O. A.

Manitoba Exhibitors Re-Elect President

At the luncheon of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of Manitoba, in the Manitoba Hall, Winnipeg, on Thursday, December 15, Mr. R. Kershaw, a veteran exhibitor of Winnipeg, was re-elected president of the organization for the coming year, his selection being unanimous. W. S. Jones of Winnipeg, manager of the local branch of the Associated First National, was the unanimous choice for the vice-presidency, replacing Milton Milligan, who had retired. F. R. Hyde was re-elected treasurer of the association.

The exhibitors decided to hold the general convention for 1922 on February 22, this being one date during the annual winter carnival in Winnipeg. This assembly will be held for the purpose of discussing business developments and also for enter-

N. Y. Federation of Labor Protests Censorship

THE following protest against motion picture censorship was adopted at a recent meeting of the Executive Council of the New York State Federation of Labor:

"Whereas, Despite the protests of organized labor of this State and liberty-loving citizens generally, the Legislature of 1921 enacted a law creating a board of State censors and empowering them and their subordinates to approve and disapprove motion picture films and printed and other advertising connected therewith; thus defying the constitutional provisions guaranteeing freedom of press and publication of fact and opinion and thereby menacing the liberties of the people by establishing tyrannical control of the means of communication; therefore be it

"Resolved, By the Executive Council of the New York State Federation of Labor in annual meeting Tuesday, December 13, 1921, at Albany, that a bill be introduced and supported in the Legislature of 1922 repealing the Motion Picture Censorship law of 1921."

Charles Lodge, house manager at Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, was killed in an automobile accident in that city Saturday evening, December 17. Mr. Lodge was promoted to assistant to Harold B. Franklin from a house detectiveship at the big Buffalo theatre.

Few New Incorporations in New York State

While seven companies incorporated in the motion picture business in New York state during the past week, the records in the Secretary of State's office at Albany show that the capitalization in each instance was so low that the aggregate amount reached only $37,500.

Batavia Theatre Corporation, Batavia, $500, H. H. Chapin, J. R. Osborne, Nikitas Dipson, Batavia; Seiden Industrial and Educational Film Corporation, $10,000, Joseph and Jack Seiden, Samuel V. Heimberger, New York; Roamax Films, Incorporated, $500, New York, Lillian Ward, Dorothy Chappell, New York; Charles Stebbins, Cambridge, Mass.; Circle Dramatics, Incorporated, $1,000, R. T. The Motion Picture News extends to all its readers and friends its best wishes for a Merry Christmas and a prosperous New Year.

The Trade Critic Says—

What of the snug home sermon which is treated dramatically in "No Woman Knows," "Why Girls Leave Home" and "A Man's Home," and satirically in "Dangerous Curve Ahead?" What of the character sketches—"Disraeli," "The Devil" and "The Ten Dollar Raise"?

What of these fine melodramas—"The City of Silent Men," "Reputation" and "Conflict"? What of the ornamental pictures—"The Gilded Lily," "Queen of Sheba" and "Forbidden Fruit"? What of the dramatic novelties—"Deception," "The Golem," "The Lotus Eater," "The Journey's End," and "Dinty"? What of the quaint studies—"Our Mutual Friend," "Lavender and Old Lace," "Jane Eyre," "The Old Oaken Bucket," "Scrap Iron," "Rip Van Winkle," and "The Old Swimmin' Hole"? What of the comedy novelties—"Doubling for Romeo," "His Nibs," "Little Eva Ascends," "Seven Years Bad Luck," and "Molly O"? What of the light romances—"Ducks and Drakes," "Oh, Lady! Lady!" and "The Love Special"? What of Chaplin's masterpiece—"The Kid"? What of the fantastic novelties—"A Connecticut Yankee" and "One Arabian Night"? What of that giant among pictures—"The Four Horsemen"? What of "The Three Musketeers"? What about these pictures for entertainment? What of that wonderfully human document—"The Conquering Power?" What of the Harold Lloyd, Buster Keaton and Clyde Cook comedies?

Some of these attractions possess better box-office values than others—some are highly artistic. All of them have been produced with the utmost sincerity to accomplish something worth while. Indeed, the year of 1921 in picture production has CARRIED ON exceedingly well. There have been dozens of mediocrities to support them. This was to be expected. The American producers need have no fear from the German or Swedish entries with such a list. We cannot be surpassed in technical equipment—lighting, photography, settings and other essential details. However, we can learn much from Sweden. In that far-off country are assembled a group of realists and idealists. It may be that they have already discovered the ART of the motion picture. They believe in simple truths. The Germans and Scandinavians will teach us pantomime. Their players simulate life because they are deeply in earnest—and they are highly talented. They seldom employ dissolves to display emotion. No scene is cut for the effect of showing some previous episode which brought sorrow or pathos in its wake. The actor portrays it all and the imagination is stimulated.

The modern story and the modern treatment of it will belong to America. We are play-children and possess a sense of humor. And there is a place for the light domestic comedies, the snug little studies of romance and sentiment. The screen is

Nat'l Ass'n Issues Fire Prevention Booklet

The Fire Prevention Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry has forwarded to exchange managers' associations throughout the country a bulletin containing ten fundamental rules for preventing exchange fires. Managers have been requested to read the rules to all employees and to post them conspicuously as a constant reminder that good exchange housekeeping is the only kind of insurance that really insures against destruction by fire.

The ten rules for fire prevention contained in the bulletin are:

1—Keep plenty of water handy. 2—Keep film in containers when not actually in use. 3—Throw film scraps into self-closing metal cans, never into open waste basket. 4—Keep the cutting rooms, etc., well swept. 5—Have a professional electrician do all your wiring, in accordance with every city ordinance. 6—Box your radiators and steam pipes. 7—Enforce the "no smoking" rule. 8—Banish the "strike anywhere" match. 9—Keep only enough cement, gasoline and collodion on hand for the day's work. 10—Appoint one man or woman as fire monitor.

To Enforce Clause on Purchase of Lithos, etc.

BEGINNING the first of the new year, Los Angeles exchanges will enforce the clause of the rental contract providing that all lithos, photographs, slides, accessories be purchased of the exchange renting the film. According to the resolution adopted by the members of the Film Exchange Board of Trade, all exhibitors not adhering to this clause will be placed on an undesirable list.

An Exhibitor Says—

There is yet another phase—the presentation of motion pictures in legitimate theatres and making them accessible at legitimate theatre admission prices. Frankly, I believe that this method is overdone, especially since some of the pictures presented in this fashion are no better in quality or otherwise than the average. There is such a thing as attempting departures, making them and overdoing the idea. We have attempted it, so much to our credit; we have done it successfully, for which we deserve so much praise. Let us not overdo the thing, for there is absolutely nothing in store for us other than unnecessary competition, dissension and disaster. In the first place, legitimate theatres are not adapted to picture presentation; they cannot accommodate large audiences as spaciously as the picture palaces, and most of the seats are not ideally located for the movie-going patron. Rather, they are better suited for the ear than for the vision. This is a handicap that will go a long way toward influencing the spectator. Then, too, the patron realizes as well as the exhibitor that he is paying an exhorbitant price for a commonplace production which is not presented above the average style.

Nevertheless, the producer has still a greater prize in view by his legitimate theatre presentation. His object is to place a greater valuation on his picture on the strength of its "run," whether protracted or shortlived.

It may almost be considered bromidic to reiterate that the film industry is still in its infancy, but it is sophistry to assert that it is very far beyond that stage. But I firmly believe that the year 1922 must decide whether it shall remain in its infancy or whether it shall take its place as the greatest asset in the amusement world. True, we appreciate the producer's efforts and realize that no producer wants to make a poor picture. If the best motive is there theoretically, why can it not be the same way practically? We must progress.

The destiny of the motion picture is in the hands of the producers, and it is entirely dependent upon them whether there shall be a famine in our field or whether the harvest shall be greater than ever before. Their opportunities are unending.

going forward. At present it is trying to find itself. It must furnish all kinds of stories to please a public of widely varied tastes. That public demands youth and beauty, romance and sentiment, in preference to a school of drama expressing unstinted realism. We have not suffered yet as a race to absorb the foreign ideas. What is the matter with the motion picture? Nothing that we can see. It has a definite place in the scheme of entertainment. At present it is an industry. Some day it may be an art. That day will come when, taking a tip from Secretary Hughes, we scrap the superfluous elements—and create a demand for real expression not tainted with the muck called gold.

War Tax on Express Shipments Revoked Jan. 1

The public will save approximately $1,500,000 a month as a result of the elimination of the war tax on express shipments according to George C. Taylor president of the American Railway Express Company. The "Revenue Act of 1921" eliminates the war tax of one cent on every twenty cents and fractions thereof in transportation charges on all express shipments. The elimination of the tax will virtually amount to a decrease in rates of a little over five per cent.

Inasmuch as the Revenue Act becomes effective January 1st 1922, the tax on all shipments forwarded "prepaid" on or before December 31st, will be collected. On shipments forwarded "collect" and arriving on or after January 1st the tax will not be assessed.

Brenon and Wm. Farnum Address Students

At Columbia University on Monday night of last week Herbert Brenon, director for William Fox, delivered a lecture on "The Art of Motion Picture Directing" before the students of the class in Motion Picture Production. William Farnum also talked to the class and gave some interesting experiences of his career on the stage and screen. Columbia inaugurated the course this fall in connection with the class on Scenario Writing.

Police Say Man Arrested Is Head of Film Crooks

William Pearson, one of the owners of the Washington Light Company 186 West Lake Street, Chicago, and declared by the police to be the brains of the gang of international film thieves, which they hold responsible for the theft of millions of dollars worth of motion picture films, was arrested by agents of the W. J. Burns Detective Agency, and Chicago detectives in Chicago this week.

Pearson is wanted in Buffalo, where there is a warrant out for him, and former Governor Edward F. Dunne, representing motion picture interests, has applied for extradition papers.

Pearson, according to police officials, has been named in a confession made at Buffalo last week by Morris Taitus, formerly of 1739 Washburn Avenue, Chicago, who was arrested at Sweet Water, Texas, and brought back to Buffalo.

Others under arrest, and said to be involved in the international operations of the gang, include T. Shima, owner of a film exchange in San Francisco, and Joe Kubey, arrested in Honolulu as he was about to sail for Japan with prints of "The Three Musketeers."

Government, state and private agencies are said to have trailed members of the alleged international film thieves for six months, and the stories of their operations form an amazing swindle tale, it is declared.

Movies to Supplant Sunday Evening Sermons

The Rev. Wellington C. Holmes, pastor of the Universal church at Logansport, Ind., has announced that he will show motion pictures of a religious nature instead of preaching sermons on Sunday evenings throughout the winter. He tried the plan last winter and filled his church with it.

"European Films Are a Boon to Independent"

Chester Beecroft, in Survey, Declares They Will Increase Business

"IMPORTED Films will be the salvation of the Independent Distributor during the current season, and will do more to revive the flagging interest of the picture fans throughout the country than anything that is likely to be done by our habit-bound producers in this country."

This statement, which is likely to stir up comment and stimulate some thought, was made by Chester Beecroft of 501 Fifth Avenue, in an interview with a Motion Picture News reporter recently.

What Mr. Beecroft says merits serious consideration, for he has had broad experience and enjoys high standing in the trade. During the war he was one of the largest independent exporters of American films to Europe, and since then has brought over some of the best European productions which have been shown here. Back of all that he knows the picture game thoroughly, having been prominently identified with it since 1909, through such mediums as the then all powerful Motion Picture Patents Company. The General Film Company, Chaplin-Mutual Company, the halcyon days of David Horsley, and Famous Players-Lasky.

For the last five years he has specialized in export and import and is personally as well known to the important people of the film trade in the various Capitols of Europe as he is in America. It was Chester Beecroft who, more than two years ago, published double page advertisements in the motion picture papers warning the industry here that unless certain definite things were done it would lose its marvelously lucrative foreign business in which, during the war, it had gained a virtual monopoly. His warning was not heeded, but his prophesy has been borne out with disastrous exactness.

Mr. Beecroft went on to say:—"The sure fire value of the imported film has already been definitely established by such powerful distributors as Famous Players-Lasky (Deception) First National (Passion—Gypsy Blood—Quo Vadis—All for a woman—Caberia, Goldwyn (Calagary—Theodora) United Artists (Carnival) so that the Independent now realizes that they are the safest form of investment.

Every picture man knows that there must be a deeper underlying cause for continual bad business than financial depression. Heat, which was the cause generally ascribed during the summer, no longer answers for any of the empty seats. Commercial conditions seem to be generally on the mend, or at least the populace is becoming used to it and is attempting to readjust itself. Why then doesn't business in the picture houses come back to normal?

Circulate among those who used to be habitual fans and ask that question. Never mind New York—that's never a safe gauge for the amusement business—but go to Stamford, to Paterson, to Worcester, to Dayton, to Dowagiac, to Salt Lake, or to the thousand other live towns that form the real backbone of the business and you will find that the fans don't go back every Tuesday or Thursday or whatever their regular picture night used to be, because the habit has been broken; they will tell you that they are 'sick of the same old thing'—the society drama—the formula made productions—the pretty star and poor company—the horrible sameness that has bored them stiff for the last two years. These folks used to go religiously on certain nights to their favorite local theatre. Now they go irregularly and only when some special appeal is made and their interest in some particular thing has been aroused.

Right here is where the foreign film comes in. It has novelty or appeal to rouse and attract them and novelty of expression when they see it. It gives them a fresh and a new view point. It breathes life and so stimulates a business that is poor and uncertain only because it has grown stale. It gives to the regular who has grown pessimistic and cold, hope and promise and will do more to revive the movie habit than any move the exhibitor can make at this time! New trade comes with it as a natural course, but what the exhibitor needs is his old dependable community trade, the regulars—the repeaters."

Asked whether there was any danger of the foreign film crowding out or hurting the home product, Mr. Beecroft was most emphatic in his statement of a contrary belief.

"I cannot imagine a more helpful influence," he said. "The tendency of these 'different' European pictures, is to rouse up the American producer and pull him out of the fatal rut he has gotten into. We have more great directors here than they have in all the rest of the world, but they have gone a little stale. The foreign film will be like medicine to them. They'll come back strong, but for the next season or two they will have to be content with second place. As to crowding out the home product, that's foolish. Out of every 1000 films produced abroad there are but two or three of the magic kind. Tons of trash are sent over and peddled around that will never, and should never, find a market. Furthermore, there are but three or four concerns in all Europe capable of turning out high-class stuff. But when they do make a good one, man dear! It looms up like the sun over the horizon.

"Last year I looked at over 300 films which were highly recommended to me in various parts of Europe. I selected five. One of them was Our Mutual Friend, which has just been released by Wid Gunning. It is clean, beautiful and inspiring. It took the jaded critics by storm and is certain to be the biggest money making success of the year, foreign or domestic.

"And right here I would like to correct the erroneous impression that Germany is the great producing center of Europe. It is not. I say this only after the most careful study, made on the ground, and with a full knowledge of producing conditions in all countries:—Our Mutual Friend and other scheduled events of the current season will prove beyond question that the finest pictures, with the most consistent quality and sustained high standard, are made by the Nordisk Films Kompagni of Copenhagen, Denmark. I have now in hand five of these photographic gems which will soon be on the market, and with which, while proving my point, I hope to do my share toward winning back the wayward fan and to help the exhibitor to restore his old time continuously profitable week in, week out business. That will mean prosperity for the Distributor, the Producer—Everyone."

EXHIBITORS' REPORTS ON NEW RELEASE

EARLY RETURNS FROM WEEK RUN THEATER

FAMOUS PLAYERS

Don't Tell Everything—

An extraordinary picture which did splendid business throughout week. (Middle West.)

Business only fair, in spite of added personal appearance of a well known star.

Those that did see the picture, however, liked it. (East.)

Good enough to hold over for a second week. Very pleasing. (East.)

Exit the Vamp—

Failed to draw them in. Stiff competition and personal appearances of stars at other houses, the cause. (East.)

Miss Lulu Bett—

The play of the same name appeared on the legitimate stage during the week of the picture, and as the former received favorable press comment the picture profited. A good week's business. (Middle West.)

The Golem—

A strong appeal was made to the Jewish population and the picture drew the largest attendance in several weeks. (Middle West.)

A Prince There Was—

Enjoyed very well. Receipts pleasing. (East.)

Forever—

The kind of a picture that appeals to a higher mentality. May go over in the larger theatres. Small theatre will not do good. (East.)

The Sheik—

Played three weeks to good business. (West.)

Third week held up so good that we think we made a mistake in not holding it on for the fourth week. (Middle West.)

The Affairs of Anatol—

Business was fair though it was a real nice picture. (West.)

Ladies Must Live—

Very poor picture and business only fair. (East.)

Poor business. Not up to Paramount standard.. (Middle West.)

ASSOCIATED FIRST NATIONAL

Tol'ble David—

Best picture in months, with extremely good business. Held audience in suspense. (East.)

Playthings of Destiny—

Picture and business only fair. (East.)

Bits of Life—

Interesting picture but only fair business. (East.)

All for a Woman—

Fair entertainment. Average business. (West.)

The Silent Call—

An average picture with business about as usual. (West.)

The Lotus Eaters—

Went across pretty fair. Criticised for too much exaggeration and not enough of technique. Receipts fair. (East.)

A very entertaining picture with plenty of laughs. Good box office value. (Middle West.)

The Invisible Fear—

Good for only three days; business just ordinary. (Middle West.)

Fair business and a fair picture. (Middle West.)

Molly O—

A big hit which is drawing throngs. (Middle West.)

The Child Thou Gavest Me—

Fine picture, but it didn't do any business for me. Too near Xmas for anything to go over. (Middle West.)

Man-Woman-Marriage—

Very good picture. Interesting always. Pretty good business for the week before Xmas. (Middle West.)

Her Social Value—

Not much of an attraction, but it did fairly well. Katherine MacDonald has a following here. (Middle West.)

FOX

The Night Horseman—

Tom Mix has a certain following here which supports him well. The picture drew a good attendance for the week. (Middle West.)

A Virgin Paradise—

Didn't appeal to the higher class of patrons; business better than fair. (Middle West.)

Thunderclap—

A dandy picture, full of interest. Had fine business on it. (West.)

Shame—

Mediocre picture and business only fair. (East.)

Queenie—

Pretty good picture. Better than the average. Business only medium. Lay this to the season. (Middle West.)

GOLDWYN

The Grim Comedian—

A good picture with an interesting twist at the end. Holt does good work as the star. (Middle West.)

Made in Heaven—

Fairly enjoyable photoplay and business kept up to about the average. (South.)

Poverty of Riches—

Couldn't hold up for a full week; too much drama. (Middle West.)

WID GUNNING

The Blot—

Very good production and good business. Audience very much enthused. (East.)

What Do Men Want?—

A fair picture. Not so good as heralded. Business fairly good for the time of year. (Middle West.)

UNIVERSAL

The Fox—

Just as good as it's cracked up to be. Live stuff. Something doing all the time. Big business. Had to put barriers up in the lobby to keep crowds lined up for the opening performance. (Middle West.)

False Kisses—

A fair picture which drew fairly good business. (West.)

REALART

Dawn of the East—

Alice Brady is popular here and the picture did a good business for the week. (Middle West.)

Everything for Sale—

Picture was right good. Nothing extra, but business good probably on account of holiday season. (South.)

METRO

Passion Fruit—

Jammed them in because of the personal appearance of Doraldina, the star. (East.)

Camille—

Fair picture. Reputation of Nazimova did much to put it over. (South.)

VITAGRAPH

The Son of Wallingford—

Not a box office title. Pleased few who saw it. (East.)

GRIFFITH

The Fall of Babylon—

Fair as regards receipts and show. (East.)

UNITED ARTISTS

Disraeli—

The personal appearance of Victor Herbert along with this picture greatly aided in attracting good houses all week. (Middle West.)

Fair. Makes strong appeal to Jewish element of our fans. Audiences were mostly of Jewish faith and it is believed most of our Jews saw and thoroughly enjoyed "Disraeli." Also, made appeal to lovers of history and biography. (South.)

The Iron Trail—

Title and material much against success. Receipts terribly punk. (East.)

Way Down East—

A wonderful production and a sure fire box office attraction. Pleased greatly. (West.)

SELZNICK

The Way of a Maid —

Very little to this picture. The best thing on the bill was Buster Keaton in "The Boat." This was one of the funniest comedies seen here in months. (Middle West.)

HODKINSON

Light in the Clearing—

Extremely good entertainment. Theatre used this picture to real capacity business. (East.)

Why Girls Leave Home—

Held over after a seven-day run, this picture came back with excellent box office figures, for the added four days. (East.)

Desert Blossoms—

Mediocre picture and business fair. (East.)

EXPLANATORY: The Honor Roll is a list of exhibitors whose deeds of exploitation have been related in the Exhibitors' Service Bureau of Motion Picture News during the year 1921. It has been compiled with two major purposes in view.

First, to give credit where credit is due and to express our appreciation to the showmen who have made possible the publication of some 2000 different exploitation stories during the year.

Second, as a service to be used by producers, distributors, exploitation men and all those who are interested in the selling of pictures.

These 700 exhibitors are live wires. They have sold their attractions to the public in 1921 and can therefore be expected to continue doing things during 1922. They ought to have the preference when bookings are made and contracts submitted. The exploitation department that doesn't make use of this list is neglecting one of its opportunities.

EDITOR'S NOTE: This summary of Motion Picture News' "With First Run Theatres" department is published principally for the benefit of the small town exhibitor who wishes to play only assured box office attractions and distrusts his own judgment for one reason or another.

Listed in the following twelve pages are the pictures that, during the last year, have played in the leading theatres in the larger cities for one week or more.

The reader is advised that no theatre's attractions are given in full for the reason that copy for this department often arrived too late for publication and that in certain cities we unavoidably have been without correspondents over a varying period.

How the big pictures of the year or at least the pictures which the theatres which set the pace for the industry have played are all represented.

Cleveland Boasts of Many Picture Palaces

OF all the big cities, Cleveland has shown the greatest gain of the year in the matter of picture palaces. It is an exacting fan indeed who can not find somewhere in the neighborhood of Euclid avenue's downtown section, the picture he especially desires to see. There are twelve houses in the city devoted to week-run programs, made up of pictures and elaborate musical numbers.

Practically every worth while feature produced during the year has been given a showing at one of the various houses, and perhaps no city represented in the "with first run theatres" department is so complete; for which the News is indebted to Elsie Loeb, our Cleveland correspondent.

Omaha Late Addition to First Run List

THE modest list of "First Runs" appearing above for Omaha is occasioned by the fact this city was not added to the department until late in the season.

J. W. Kennebec represents the News in Omaha.

What Philadelphia and Atlanta Played

THE Philadelphia list appearing at the left is another record of faithful representation on the part of a correspondent. Miss Margaret Martin has beaten the dead line most of the time.

Miss Pearl Gaddis, correspondent at Atlanta has also come through with her "First Run" copy in a commendable way. A mailing point a long way from New York explains the reason that Atlanta is not more complete.

Milwaukee, Indianapolis, Cincinnati and Des Moines

CINCINNATI'S list is a prize winner. L. C. Beutel and prior to his engagement, Correspondent Adams have enabled us to give this city almost a perfect score.

Our Des Moines representative, Miss Magdalene Phillips, has an intermittent movement. She runs all right for a while and then stops for a spell, all of which does not give Des Moines a very good showing.

Milwaukee has lately been added to the "First Runs," accounting for the abbreviated list given. J. W. Martin, Milwaukee correspondent, is always ahead of the deadline and his copy needs no blue pencil.

What They Ran at Chicago and Seattle

TO L. H. Mason, in charge of the News, Chicago office, we are indebted for a representative list of the pictures which have played the Windy City's first run theatres.

The bills reported, however, have not all been for the same theatres and in consequence the list is variegated.

Seattle "First Run" wires from W. A. Prager are as regular as they are expensive. They arrive each week well in advance of the dead line and the list presented herewith admits of some interesting deductions, among which is that Seattle theatres are not following the lead of any other city in selecting attractions.

For instance, the inquisitive person will find missing from the Seattle list many pictures that Eastern exhibitors have considered real box office bets. Also that if any producer has a string on any of these theatres it is not apparent in the bookings. Famous Players-Lasky pictures play one house, one week and another the next. Ditto, First National.

The List from Pittsburgh and Minneapolis

PITTSBURGH has a lot of first run theatres and a long list of "First Run" copy, thanks to E. A. Wheeler, local correspondent.

More than a dozen houses in the down town district play the pick of the pictures and besides some noteworthy indefinite engagements have been put over in other theatres.

Pittsburgh is one big city where feature pictures and the shorter lengths are still counted on as the box office magnet, with music and the ballet not billed above the film part of the show. In other words, in Pittsburgh a picture show is still a picture show, and not half given over to grand opera and the ballet.

What Detroit, Kansas City and Boston Played

FRANK C. TRUE, Kansas City correspondent, makes a fine showing. He has reported the bills at five theatres with a regularity that equals clockwork. The Kansas City list is a notable one in that it contains an extra large number of real box office bets and an exceedingly small number of "flops," thanks perhaps to the showmanship of Frank L. Newman and his staff.

In Detroit, we had a good man but we lost him. Then we got another good man, Frank Heffernan, and now the Detroit "First Runs" are coming through again.

Boston's representation is not so much. Correspondents have come and gone—mostly gone. The result is an incomplete list that shows nothing that the Boston theatres have played in recent months. Here is another point where a newspaper man is desired. Boston exhibitors please recommend someone.

BALTIMORE, thanks to C. E. Cooper, has almost a perfect showing.

W. T. Morris, correspondent at Denver, was faithful until two or three months ago. Then he fell by the wayside, failing even to answer inquiring letters. Some Denver newspaper man in need of a little extra jack and willing to do a little work for it, please write.

From New Orleans, home of the Saenger Amusement Co., and our correspondent, W. A. Green, we have a complete record back to the time when this city was added to the service, some six months

St. Louis, Washington, St. Paul

ST. LOUIS "First Run" copy came through regularly from Paul A. Yawitz, now writing exploitation stories for the Fox Film Company. His resignation made it necessary to break in a new correspondent, G. E. Bell. The result is a St. Louis list not quite complete.

Washington is represented 49 weeks of the 52, thanks to W. A. Pollock, correspondent at the Capital City. With a five-hour mail delivery, perhaps he is not entitled to any more credit that other correspondents who made the dead line a smaller number of times.

CAPITOL—A Private Scandal.

If I Were an Exhibitor—

By J. S. Dickerson

In One of the Big Towns

I'd:

Play the good ones for extended runs.

Lay off the bad ones.

Keep an eye out for real melodrama and farce comedy that was good enough to make even the newspaper men laugh.

Be willing to play along with the chap who has an entertaining independent picture that he wanted to get off to a good start.

Look twice before I booked a foreign picture, especially if it was a costume bill.

Try to keep my features down to five and six reel lengths.

Book every good short reel subject I could get and then give it its share of the billing.

Tell the producers to keep their twenty-four sheets and spend the same amount of money in exploitation that somebody might notice.

Get acquainted with all the newspaper boys myself and see that my employees treated their "Annie Oakley's" with respect, not with distain.

Fire any usher I ever caught taking a tip—or getting fresh—or up stage—or too big for his job.

Let the other fellow play the toe dancers—unless I could pick up a celebrity for a week or so.

Go as easy as I could on the grand opera and still keep the music nuts coming.

Be around the house often enough and long enough and unexpectedly enough, so I would know who was earning his money and who wasn't.

Listen to my scenic artist rave about the art of the futuristic stuff and then tell him to paint the set so people would know what it was supposed to be.

Never let my specialty artists take a curtain call. They get paid for doing their act—not bowing.

Watch my projection. A lot of people have bad eyesight.

Refuse to book a picture that was mostly subtitles. Lots of people can't read and a lot more don't like to.

Hire a ticket seller who didn't look like a wax figure and who could smile once in the while—raise her wages if she would do it.

Have a room where mama could leave the baby with a motherly old lady.

Advertise my shows consistently but leave out the bull.

Play Mary Pickford, Doug. Fairbanks, Charlie Chaplin, Norma Talmadge, if I didn't make a cent.

And a lot of other things I can't think of now.

In One of the Middle Class Cities

I'd:

Play the good ones a week—maybe.

Lay off the bad ones.

Think twice before I educated my patrons to a fifty-piece orchestra.

Play stars as much as possible so long as the price was right.

Make my theatre as homelike as I could.

Use local talent whenever I could find some one who had something.

Dominate the movie section by being a good advertiser and a friend of the guy who had charge of it.

Never miss a bet when it came to helping along in local charities or other popular movements.

Know the city officials, the newspaper men, the sky pilots, etc., by their first names—but be chary about using them.

Get up a mailing list that was more than a jumble of names and then print a house organ with the help of local merchants that would be a movie magazine by itself.

Use a lot of hokum exploitation when I had the right kind of picture, but go slow on the serious dramas.

Use plenty of display space in the newspapers with scene cuts and considerable about the bill I was playing—not just the feature alone.

Never tell 'em I had a knockout when I knew it was a flop.

Never quote New York—it's a red flag.

Never let any long-haired musician get the idea he was running the show—when he got temperamental I'd break his heart by getting him his hat.

Hire a nice old granddaddy as door man—dress him up in tuxedo, evenings—no brass buttons.

Fix up a nice lobby display once in the while and get a two column front page story in both the morning and evening paper on what a clever guy I was—also a lot of free advertising for the show.

Keep the house clean—warm in the winter—cool in the summer if possible.

Change my admission price according to the attraction—maybe—if it worked out well.

Give 'em good music but not so good that the sheriff began to think about coming around for the key.

Be on the job myself so much that the help would wonder which one I had my eye on.

Play Mary Pickford, Charlie Chaplin, Norma Talmadge and Doug if I didn't make a cent.

And do a lot of things I can't think of now.

In One of The Burgs

I'd:

Play the good ones long enough to get 'em all out

Lay off the bad ones—positively

Never book a costume bill—unless it was something that couldn't fail.

Fire the pianist or organist about once a month and get a new one who knew some different tunes.

Pay regular money for the good stuff, but be tight on any of the ordinary features.

Never miss a picture that I could get the schools, the churches, the lodges, etc., to help put over.

Play no benefits—help one organization and you can never stop.

Know every patron by name, where he likes to see, and the kind of pictures he enjoys.

Keep the house above reproach along moral lines.

Tolerate no bums, drunks, questionable characters or rouch necks.

Yank the first kid who started to get noisy out of his seat, escort him to the door, give him back his ten cents and invite him back when he thinks he can behave.

Listen to all the small town belles relate the details about what a good picture they saw at the city—explain when I intended to play it or lie plausably the reason I wasn't.

Be a part of the town—a booster for the base ball team—a donator to its charities, etc., but no aspirant for its official honors.

Help the editor get out the paper and incidentally make up all the odd spaces with movie stuff.

Stay sober and be respectable whether I wanted to or not.

Take the Motion Picture News and know more about what was in it than the gang that gets it out.

Have a copy of the Booking Guide on tap whenever a film salesman came along. Convince him that I knew more about the picture business than he did.

Never write a letter to a film exchange asking for a price. It's useless.

Play Norma Talmadge, Charlie Chaplin, Mary and Doug and pray that it wouldn't rain on their dates.

And a lot of other things I can think of but haven't space to relate.

WHAT THE MAKERS SAY ABOUT PICTURES

Marie Prevost, Universal star, appearing in "A Parisian Scandal"

Veiller to Screen Own Story for Metro

Bayard Veiller, stage producer and playwright, is about to produce one of his own original stories for Metro. Bert Lytell, star of the Metro producing unit of which Mr. Veiller is director, will play in the stellar role.

De Witt Jennings and Sylvia Breamer will appear in prominent parts.

In the new story Mr. Lytell will be seen as a whimsical amateur detective who, because of his efforts in his avocation, stumbles upon an important government problem and solves it.

The story has been prepared for the screen by Lenore Coffee of Metro's scenario staff.

Lon Chaney Completes Fourth for Goldwyn

Lon Chaney has recently completed the fourth Goldwyn picture in which he has had a leading role—"A Blind Bargain," made from Barry Pain's novel, "The Octave of Claudius." Chaney has long been known as a wizard at making up for his parts, but in "A Blind Bargain," it is said, he has surpassed anything that he has accomplished in the past in the art of make-up. He has a dual role in the new photoplay, that of a physician who conducts his experiments upon human beings, and that of a hunchback who is a sort of assistant to the physician and who had, at one time, submitted to being experimented upon.

6 Goldwyn Releases Due Soon

"The Sin Flood" and "Grand Larceny" Head List

IN carrying out its new year policy of "Big Pictures with Featured Players" Goldwyn is preparing six big new productions for release to exhibitors early in the new year.

These six photoplays will comprise the third group of releases of the Goldwyn fifth year product.

"The Sin Flood" heads the six. The story told in "The Sin Flood" is one of the most dramatic and soul-searching that the films have yet produced and the cast is announced as the most perfect that Goldwyn has ever assembled for any production. Helene Chadwick and Richard Dix are featured in the production. James Kirkwood, Ralph Lewis, Will Walling William Orlamond, Otto Hoffman, L. H. King, Darwin Karr, John Steppling and Howard Davies are seen in excellent roles, each giving a carefully etched character portrayal. Frank Lloyd directed the picture, J. G. Hawks adapted the story from the drama, "Syndafloden," by the Swedish novelist and playwright, Henning Berger.

Albert Payson Terhune's drama of modern marriage and some of the modern ills that afflict it, "Grand Larceny," is a thrilling photoplay about everyday, natural human beings placed in a false and difficult situation through a woman's love for admiration and attention. Elliott Dexter and the beautiful Claire Windsor are featured, with Roy Atwell, Tom Gallery and Richard Tucker in the cast. Wallace Worsley directed.

"Doubling for Romeo" is a screen comedy that, while totally different from Goldwyn's great fourth year comedy, "Scratch My Back," may yet be compared with it for the high position it is going to hold among the year's screen comedies. Will Rogers has the comedy role of his screen career as the Arizona cowpuncher who breaks into the "movies." "He gives a great performance in a great comedy" is the word from the Goldwyn office. Clarence Badger has directed the picture with fine sense of humor. Sylvia Breamer and Sydney Ainsworth head the supporting cast. Elmer L. Rice fashioned the original story—with the aid of Will Rogers and Will Shakespeare.

"His Back Against the Wall" is a new sort of western photocomedy in which Raymond Hatton, the featured player, gives an unusual screen comedy characterization. It was founded upon a magazine story by John Frederick and was directed by Rowland V. Lee. Virginia Valli, Will Walling, Gordon Russell, Raymond Cannon, Shannon Day, Virginia Madison, Gordon Russell, Fred Kohler and Jack Curtis are in the cast.

"The Wall Flower," Rupert Hughes new photoplay, directed by himself, in which Colleen Moore is featured, is in the list of six new Goldwyn pictures. It is another Hughes portrayal of everyday American home life. Richard Dix, Gertrude Astor, Laura Laplante, Tom Gallery, Rush Hughes, son of the author, Dan Todd, Fanny Stockbridge and Emily Rait are in the cast.

Mary Roberts Rinehart, one of America's most popular novelists and playwrights, turned original scenario writer for the occasion, is represented by "The Glorious Fool," a comedy with a strong dramatic situation. Helene Chadwick and Richard Dix are featured in the production with Kate Lester, Otto Hoffman, Theodore von Eltz, Vera Lewis, John Ince and others in the cast. E. Mason Hopper directed. There is in this photocomedy the strongly romantic twist which has made Mrs. Rinehart so popular with readers and theatre patrons.

12 Weeks of Hodkinson Pictures

Francesca Theatre, in 'Frisco, Books for 12 Solid Weeks

ONE of the longest bookings ever noted in the industry is one announced this week whereby the Francesca theatre in San Francisco, under the management of R. E. Sharbara, will show Hodkinson released productions for a period of twelve solid weeks. The contract provides for an extensive exploitation campaign which will be conducted by the Hodkinson branch in San Francisco.

Beginning with the week of December 10th, with "The Breaking Point," the productions included in the engagement, and the dates, are as follows: Week of December 17th, "The Other Woman;" week of December 24th, "A Certain Rich Man;" week of December 31st, "Lavender and Old Lace;" week of January 7th, "The Journey's End;" week of January 14th, "Rip Van Winkle;" week of January 21st, "God's Crucible;" week of January 28th, "Fifty Candles;" week of February 4th, "Cameron of the Royal Mounted;" week of February 11th, "At the Sign of the Jack O'Lantern;" week of February 18th, "Heart's Haven" and "Dawn."

Of this list, four productions, "Cameron of the Royal Mounted," "At the Sign of the Jack O'Lantern," "Heart's Haven," and "The Grey Dawn" have not yet been released. "Cameron" will be released late in December, "Jack O'Lantern" in January and "Heart's Haven" and "The Grey Dawn" in February. The remaining productions in the schedule have all been released since last April, with "Rip Van Winkle" and "Fifty Candles" October and December releases respectively. The latter attraction, an Irvin V. Willat Production, was released as late as December 11th.

The Francesca theatre has recently changed hands and under new management has been remodeled and refurnished to an extent that places it on a plane with San Francisco's leading down-town houses. The Francesca caters to the highest class of patronage, and since its recent change in policy the theatre has come to be recognized as serious opposition to the largest houses in the City.

The Francesca booking is believed by Hodkinson to be the first one in the history of the industry in which the production of any one company have played an engagement of twelve weeks running. This definitely establishes Hodkinson product in the San Francisco field, a territory in which the releases of the Hodkinson Corporation are ably handled by S. Vogel and J. P. Meehan, Division Managers.

Katherine MacDonald Films Near Finish

Under Chet Withey's direction camera work is nearly finished at the Preferred Pictures, Los Angeles studios on Katherine MacDonald's newest Associated First National production. "Domestic Relations" is the title of the photoplay selected by B. P. Schulberg, president of the company.

William P. Carleton plays the masculine lead with Miss MacDonald. Barbara LaMarr, who recently scored with Douglas Fairbanks and Marguerite de La Motte in "The Three Musketeers," and Frank Leigh, a character actor of note, are also engaged in important roles.

Film Version Surpasses Play

So Aver Metro Officials of "Turn to the Right"

THAT "Turn to the Right" will prove an even greater success as a photoplay than as a theatrical production is the opinion expressed by Metro officials after witnessing a special showing of the new Rex Ingram screen production, which was adapted from John Golden's record-breaking Broadway success. The first print of the new picture was received at the Metro headquarters in New York from the Metro studios in Hollywood last week.

Among the audience at the special showing were John Golden, who presented the play on the stage; Marcus Loew, Richard R. Rowland, president of Metro; William E. Atkinson, general manager of the motion picture company; E. M. Saunders, general sales manager, and the district and branch managers of the Metro system of exchanges.

Much had been heard of the merit of Mr. Ingram's photoplay succeeding his "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" and "The Conquering Power," but not until the picture was actually flashed on the screen in New York was its excellence actually appreciated.

Mr. Golden himself, who still retains half-interest in the screen version of "Turn to the Right," said:

"Aside from the splendid way Mr. Ingram has caught the spirit of 'Turn to the Right,' let me say what I think of the picture as a money-maker. I think it's the biggest thing in sight. I am not a motion picture man—at least I haven't been until now. But when I put 'Turn to the Right' on the stage, both Mr. Smith and Mr. Hazzard and myself regretted in a way the limitations of the stage and their necessitation of leaving out some of the biggest stuff indicated in the dialogue. The race track scenes, for example, where Joe Bascom plays Firefly to win—and loses. They're wonderfully spectacular, and, when one knows the story of what loss will mean, big dramatic situations. In the picture, these are shown, where they could not be in the play. Hence, knowing that Mr. Ingram has lost nothing of the scenes that put the play over, and that he has, by reason of his imagination and the broader scenic scope of the screen, been able to include big stuff the theatre could not think of handling. I believe that 'Turn to the Right' as a photodrama is a more smashing production than any stage presentation could hope to make it."

Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro Pictures Corporation, who saw the picture, said:

"I've just come back from Europe, where I have had opportunity to show Mr. Ingram's 'The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse' to persons highly prominent politically and socially in London and Paris, and to the author of the novel, Senor Ibanez, himself; and the unrestrained enthusiasm of everyone who saw it made me wonder if such a success could be duplicated.

"And the first thing I am shown upon my return to New York is 'Turn to the Right.' It is entirely different from "The Four Horsemen.' It is American in setting, where the Ibanez story was South American and Continental, but it bears the same masterly Ingram touch. If there is any picture that can be a bigger box-office success than 'The Four Horsemen' it is 'Turn to the Right.' When the play ran in New York a few seasons ago, I saw it several times, partly because every time I saw it I enjoyed it as much as the first time; and partly because I hoped some day we might be able to do it in pictures. Now that we have done it, and done it even better than I thought it could be done, I am willing to predict that it is going to take the country off its feet with its popularity. And it's going to put the exhibitor very solidly on his feet with its box-office returns."

Metro Officials Are Dined

Executives of Tiffany Productions and Metro Join in Festive Evening

OFFICERS of Metro Pictures Corporation and Tiffany Productions, Inc., and district sales heads of the Metro forces, distributors and makers, respectively, of a new series of pictures starring Mae Murray, attended in a body the performance of Al Jolson's show "Bombo," in New York Tuesday evening, December 13, and later were entertained at Healy's restaurant, 66th Street, by M. H. Hoffman, vice-president and general manager of Tiffany Productions.

This was a second event to signalize the agreement upon a contract for Metro to release "Peacock Alley," Miss Murray's first Tiffany picture, and others forthcoming. A few days previous the star herself was the guest of the officials of Metro and Tiffany at a luncheon at the Hotel Claridge.

The merit of "Peacock Alley," which motion picture critics hail as Miss Murray's most splendid photodramatic achievement, and the high anticipation of its box-office success prompted a final get-together before the Metro district managers left New York for their several territories and members of the Tiffany production staff departed with the star and her company for Cuba, where the next Mae Murray picture, "Fascination" is to be made.

The star and Robert Z. Leonard, director general of Tiffany Productions, Inc., who supervises all Mae Murray photoplays, were so busily engaged in preparations for the West Indian trip that they could not attend the theatre party, but found time only to drop in for a moment at the supper at Healy's.

Mr. Hoffman's guests included: William E. Atkinson, Metro general manager; E. M. Saunders, Metro general sales manager; and T. J. Connors, his assistant; George Perry, treasurer of Tiffany Productions; J. E. D. Meador, director of publicity and advertising for Metro; the following Metro district managers: C. E. Kessnich, of Atlanta; E. A. Golden, of Boston; S. A. Shirley, of Chicago; W. C. Bachmeyer, of Cincinnati; H. Lustig, of Los Angeles; A. Abeles, of the Metro New York exchange; Frank Carson, of the Chicago-Record-Herald and Examiner; and Edward E. Pidgeon.

Southard Brown, press representative of Tiffany Productions, assisted Mr. Hoffman in arrangements for the entertainment.

Elaborate Set Built for Torchy Comedy

An elaborate set, representing street scenes on the lower East Side of New York, is being used in the making of the forthcoming Torchy Comedy, featuring Johnny Hines as "Torchy" of the Sewell Ford stories.

The set is the biggest ever built for any picture of the Torchy series.

Biggest Circuits Book "The Lure of Jade"

BASING his judgment upon the volume of circuit bookings already recorded for Pauline Frederick's most recent R-C production, "The Lure of Jade," it is the opinion of Charles R. Rogers, general manager of distribution for that organization, that the popularity of Miss Frederick is right now at its highest peak

Practically every big motion picture theatre circuit in the country has booked the Frederick production, which was released on November 13. Not only have the leading chains of theatres booked it but virtually all of the smaller ones as well and the prediction is freely made that "The Lure of Jade" will receive the benefit of wider selling than any other R.-C. production in which the star has ever appeared.

Ince and Sullivan Have Won Fame as "Team"

The production of "Hail the Woman," Thomas H. Ince's special for First National release is another result of the close collaboration which has existed for many years between that producer and the noted screen dramatist, C. Gardner Sullivan.

Their "team work" has had a far-reaching influence on the development of the motion picture industry, and it is pointed out that the present production is the outcome of a joint survey and diagnosis, on the part of producer and dramatist, as to just what constitutes a "good picture" in the opinion of the American public.

Sullivan, who is a former newspaper writer of note, has written stories for the Thomas H. Ince productions ever since the producer became a factor in the motion picture industry.

Three views from the "Pathe Playlets," a revival of former Pathe features edited down to three reels. At left—"At Bay," starring Florence Reed. Center—"The Midnight Stage," starring Frank Keenan. At Right—"The Hunting of 'The Hawk,'" co-starring Marguerite Snow and William Courtney. "The Midnight Stage," scheduled for January 29th release, will inaugurate the series

New York "L" Set for DeMille Production

One of the scenes in Cecil DeMille's production of "Saturday Night," scheduled for release by Paramount in February, shows an elevated railway train thundering past the windows of a tenement in New York. Since it was impossible to transplant the Lasky studio alongside of a New York "L," DeMille's ingenuity brought the "L" to the Lasky studio.

The cars were made of a single thickness of building board and painted to resemble "L" coaches. These were coupled together and suspended from an overhead carriage. Two of these overhead tracks were constructed each carrying a train of three cars. Motion was supplied by a gang of workmen, two large drums and the necessary cables.

The story of "Saturday Night" is by Jeanie Macpherson and the picture boasts of an all-star cast which includes Leatrice Joy, Conrad Nagel, Edith Roberts, Julia Faye, Edythe Chapman, Theodore Roberts, Sylvia Ashton, John Davidson and James Neill.

Old Favorites to Be Re-Issued

Pathe Editing Former Features Down to Three Reels

PATHE announces that it will re-issue its greatest features edited down to three reels. Frank Keenan's "The Midnight Stage" will inaugurate the series which will be known under the name of "Pathe Playlets." "The Midnight Stage" will be released January 29th.

Some of the screen's foremost actors and actresses appeared in the pictures already placed on the "Pathe Playlet" schedule, and they were directed by eminent artists of cinematographic construction, including George Fitzmaurice, Ernest Warde, Edward Jose and Theodore Wharton.

Among the starred and featured players are Frank Keenan, Irene Castle, Florence Reed, Warner Oland, Elliott Dexter, Eric Von Stroheim, Helene Chadwick, Gail Kane, Bruce McRae, Paul McAllister, Marguerite Snow, William Courtney, Frank Sheridan, Madelaine Traverse, Antonio Moreno, J. H. Gilmour, Ethel Grey Terry, Creighton Hale, and William Riley Hatch.

Included in the list of "Pathe Playlets" will be several Baby Marie Osborne attractions, the titles of which will be announced later.

Under the present arrangements, the initial releases will be as follows:

January 29th, "The Midnight Stage", starring Frank Keenan, adapted from the famous stage success, "The Lyons Mail". The cast includes Joseph Dowling, Mignon Anderson, Maude George, Thomas Guise, Wadsworth Harris, and Charles Gunn. It was directed by Ernest Warde.

February 25th—"Convict 993", starring Irene Castle, playing the part of a high class woman detective who, in order to catch a gang of crooks, goes to jail to meet the woman member of the gang, and thus get in touch with them. In the supporting cast is Warner Oland, Helene Chadwick, J. H. Gilmour, Paul Everton, and Harry Benham. It was directed by William Parke.

February 12th—"Via Wireless", from the famous stage play of the same name, by Winchell Smith and Paul Armstrong, starring Gail Kane. George Fitzmaurice directed this, and, in the cast supporting Miss Kane, are Bruce McRae and Paul McAllister.

February 19th—"The Hunting of the Hawk", co-starring Marguerite Snow and William Courtney, and directed by George Fitzmaurice.

February 26th—"At Bay", from the famous Broadway stage success by George Scarborough. Florence Reed had the starring role in this production, which was the work of George Fitzmaurice. The cast includes Frank Sheridan, recently seen in "The Rider of the King Log", Lyster Chambers, and DeWitt Jennings.

March 5th—"Sylvia of the Secret Service." This is another George Fitzmaurice production starring Irene Castle. Miss Castle was supported by Elliott Dexter, now a star; Eric Von Stroheim, noted producer and actor; J. H. Gilmore, Suzanne Willa and T. Wigney Percival.

It is proposed by Pathe to release fifteen pictures in the first series. These all have been selected, and while the schedule is subject to alteration, in its present status it is as follows:

March 12th—Baby Marie Osborne feature (title to be announced later).

March 19th—"Loaded Dice", starring Frank Keenan in a story from the book by Ellery Clarke.

March 26th — "The Closing Net", adapted from the book by Henry V. Rowland, the original version of which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post. Madelaine Traverse is a featured player in this offering, which was directed by Edward Jose.

April 2nd—"The Mark of Cain," starring Irene Castle. Adapted from the book by Carolyn Wells, and directed by George Fitzmaurice.

Ass'd Exhibitors to Release "Lady Godiva"

Word from the offices of Associated Exhibitors states that plans are being made to release Wistaria Productions' big spectacle film, "Lady Godiva," during February. Much interest is being shown by the exhibitors over the great possibilities of this production proving one of the outstanding features of the year, and Associated Exhibitors declare that it will be preceded by a smashing big advertising campaign.

Founded upon the poem of Lady Godiva, by Lord Alfred Tennyson, the film version is said to be perfect in its delineation of England in the early feudal period. The titles of the production are said to be beautifully illustrated by art and color work.

Russian Scenes Taken in Face of Death

Ariel Varges, the International News cameraman in Russia, who now is supplying International News Reels with astounding pictures of life and conditions in the starving land of the Soviet, daily is taking his life in his hands to get these pictures, it recently became known by cable news dispatches to American papers recounting his narrow escapes at the hands of Red troops.

At a recent anniversary of the Chika, the blood-thirsty Extraordinary Commission of the counter-revolutions, Varges was roughly handled while filming the celebration in front of the Kremlin.

Educational's Varied Program

HAVING distributed during 1921—its first full year as a national and international distributing organization—a large number of high quality short subjects—Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., will begin the new year with enough short pictures of various types ready for distribution, in production, or planned, to supply a big share of the short subject requirements of American exhibitors in 1922.

With the several brands of two-reel comedies released by Educational, an average of at least half of the pictures called for in the 1921-1922 contracts have been delivered to Educational or completed ready for early delivery and release.

These comedies have maintained a higher average of fun and quality than has ever been shown in any large group of short comedies before. From the standpoint of production, sums of money have been spent on many of these pictures that exceed the cost of some features of greater length. Expensive sets, large casts including many comedy stars, really entertaining and worth while stories, all have gone to put these comedies on a new high level of quality.

The beginning of the 1921-1922 production season also has seen the introduction through Educational of an entertaining and instructive novelty that has met with unanimous approval—the series of Sketchografs by Julian Ollendorff. The new year will see the presentation of a new type of scenic picture by Robert C. Bruce, creator of the famous Bruce Scenic Beautiful. His new pictures are to be called "Wilderness Tales," and present simple but attractive little stories of men in the great outdoors, with beautiful scenic backgrounds.

Among the two-reel comedies the Christie Comedies furnish a fine example of a fine high level of quality consistently maintained. "Nothing Like It," "Falling For Fanny," "Saving Sister Susie," "No Parking" and the recently completed "A Barnyard Cavalier" are outstanding examples of elaborate production and uproarious fun.

To Begin the New Year with High-Class Short Subjects

Twenty-four comedies are to constitute the year's output of the Christie Studio. The thirteenth picture of the series, "One Stormy Knight," featuring Dorothy Devore, has just arrived in New York, and three other pictures are in varying stages of production on the coast. "By Hook or Crook," with Bobby Vernon; "'Twas Ever Thus," featuring Viora Daniel, and "A Rambling Romeo," With Neal Burns as the featured actor, are the pictures that will follow "One Stormy Knight."

Picture No. 6 in the series of twelve Torchy Comedies, is to be called "Battling Torchy." The Mermaid Comedies have won greater applause than ever before. "Robinson Crusoe, Ltd.," and "The Vagrant" have showed in many of the biggest theatres of the country, and have won unanimous praise.

Other pictures in the Mermaid series have included all-star casts. Among the actors of note who appear in these pictures are Lige Conley, Jimmie Adams, Hap Ward, Elinor Lynn, Jack Lloyd, Otto Friese and Frank Coleman.

William S. Campbell has produced for Educational a whimsical group of comedies featuring children and animals. This series of Campbell Comedies began with "The Stork's Mistake," which has made a big hit in some of the country's finest theatres, including the Capitol in New York.

Ollendorff's Sketchografs have included such popular subjects as "Eve's Leaves," a review in sketches of the history of women's styles; "Play Ball!" "Seeing Greenwich Village" and others. His latest release, "What's The Limit," has been approved by the Council for Limitation of Armament as one of the strongest of arguments against the international race in armaments which the nations of the world are now trying to find a way of stopping.

Six Toonerville Comedies by Fontaine Fox are to be released. The first of these, already available to theatres, is "The Skipper's Last Resort."

During 1921 Educational has released, in addition to the pictures mentioned and the occasional World Wanderings, showing in pictures unusual scenes of unusual places and people, several specials that have been among the year's most popular short subjects. These have included "The Race of the Age," "Modern Centaurs," "The Runaway Train" and others. This service will be continued during 1922, the first of such specials being the three-reel super-special "The Battle of Jutland."

Among the finest pictures made available to theatres during the Fall of 1921 were the Selig-Rork Photoplays, splendid dramatic subjects in two reels, based on stories by famous authors and played by casts including such well-known actors as Lewis Stone, Ethel Grey Terry, Wallace Beery, Walt Whitman and others.

New Franchise Holding Theatre in Kentucky

THE filing of articles of incorporation for two important companies in Louisville marks a notable addition to the motion picture interests of Kentucky, and the building of a theatre in Lexington which will be one of the handsomest picture houses in the South.

It means also a fine addition to the First National family.

The Lafayette Amusement Company was incorporated here with $250,000 capital stock. It is building the new Lafayette theatre in Lexington, near the New Lafayette Hotel. Prominent Louisville and Lexington men and one Columbus (Ohio) man are the incorporators.

The Elless Realty Company has also been incorporated. This is a company to hold property in Lexington purchased by Colonel Levy and M. Switow adjoining the new Lafayette theatre.

Metro Expects 1922 to Be Its Biggest Year

Because of its big productions—the only real stimulus to dispel the industry's lethargy and pessimism—Metro expects 1922 to be the most signally successful in its life as a producing and distributing company, is the declaration this week of William E. Atkinson, general manager of Metro Pictures Corporation.

"The Metro organization feels," said Mr. Atkinson, "that it has a running start in the current triumphs of the big productions it already has released. Rex Ingram's 'The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse' and 'The Conquering Power' show no signs of having spent even a fraction of their box-office power; and Metro has scheduled two forthcoming Ingram pictures, 'Turn to the Right' and 'The Frisoner of Zenda.' The new series of Tiffany productions, starring Mae Murray, and beginning with 'Peacock Alley;' and the acquisition of the most extraordinary screen play France has produced, 'L'Atlantide' make the Metro 1922 schedule one of more than brilliant promise.

Special Lobby Display for "Sin Flood"

Goldwyn has prepared a special screen lobby display for "The Sin Flood." The screen consists of five panels which may be used together or detached. Each panel measures 27 x 45¼ inches and contains a portrait of one of the five principal players. These portraits are reproductions of drawings of J. Henry Bracker, the prominent artist. The five players whose portraits are used are Helene Chadwick, Richard Dix, James Kirkwood, Otto Hoffman and L. H. King.

Bartine Burkett Opposite Gareth Hughes

Bartine Burkett, the little bathing beauty who made her dramatic debut in support of Gareth Hughes in "Stay Home," his latest Metro picture, has been selected by George D. Baker for an even more important part Mr. Hughes's next S-L production, "The Adventures of a Ready Letter-Writer," from the story by Blanche Brace.

The new publication is called "The Big U Exploitation Weekly," and it is written and edited by Marc Lachman, exploitation representative of the Big U Exchange.

Exploitation suggestions, new stories on what the other exhibitors are doing with Universal production, exhibitors' notes, illustrations showing the exploitation possibilities of Universal products and other interesting features are to be printed weekly in the new publication.

The Big U Exploitation Weekly will be distributed gratis, upon request, among exhibitors in the Metropolitan territory.

"Sailor-MadeMan" toBe Xmas Week Attraction

Harold Lloyd in "A Sailor-Made Man" will be the big Christmas week offering at the Capitol Theatre, starting on Sunday, Dec. 25th. S. L. Rothafel is planning an unusually attractive presentation for his Yuletide program, of which this Associated Exhibitors-Harold Lloyd production will be the big feature attraction. It was selected because of its superb excellence as a comedy feature and will be exploited accordingly. Being the first feature production which Harold Lloyd has made, "A Sailor-Made Man" was afforded elaborate settings by the Hal Roach organization, which surpass any yet employed in so-called comedy productions. It has aroused much enthusiasm, which will undoubtedly be greatly strengthened by this showing in one of the largest of all photoplay theatres.

New Pathe Serial Will Be Released Jan. 1st

Pathe Exchange, Inc., announces that the first episode of "White Eagle," the new Pathe serial starring Ruth Roland, will be released the week of January 1st. "The Sign of the Trident" is the title of the opening chapter, and no time is wasted in plunging the onlooker into the mystery and fast action of Ruth Roland's ninth chapter play.

The same formula has been followed in the production as used in "Hands Up" and "Ruth of the Rockies." The serial is censor-proof and not a shot is fired in the fifteen episodes. A large cast of excellent players appear in support of Miss Roland, including such names as Earl Metcalfe, Harry Girard, Virginia Ainsworth, Otto Lederer, and others. In addition, five hundred Indians and a small army of cowboys were employed for the production.

English Comedian a Fox Star

Lupino Lane to Make Series of Comedies for Fox Release

IN accordance with news forecasted more than a year ago, William Fox announces the accession of Lupino Lane, one of England's favorite comedians, to the ranks of Fox Stars. Lupino Lane has completed his theatrical engagements in the East and has left for California, where he will start work on his first William Fox production January 1. This idol of Drury Lane and the London Hippodrome will be presented by Mr. Fox in two-reel comedies to be known as Lupino Lane Special Comedies.

In October, 1920, Mr. Fox sent out a message to exhibitors and motion picture patrons promising that the screen will be enriched by special comedies presenting this long-standing king-pin of the London music halls and the London pantomime stage to American audiences as a star on the screen. In accordance with this announcement, a contract was entered into with Lupino Lane at that time; but this contract was subject to the completion of certain theatrical engagements to which the English star was bound by agreement then existing, and William Fox had to wait more than a year before he could put Lane to work in his West Coast Studios.

Lupino Lane for many years has ably borne the weight of his crown as the king of English comedians and pantomimists. Over there he is known as "the English Fred Stone," but those of the American audiences and newspaper critics who saw his work as the principal comedian of "Afgar" during its tour of the United States, have referred to him as being a Fred Stone, Al Jolson and Will Rogers rolled into one.

Lupino Lane was not a "sudden find" or a comedy genius discovered overnight. He was dedicated to his career as a fun-maker at three years of age. In keeping with English and Continental tradition, he is descended from a long aristocracy of stage folk. He is a member of the famous family of Lupino whose name was famous at old Convent Garden, where it long held a principal place on the play-bills. On his mother's side he is a nephew of Mrs. Sarah Lane, celebrated actress and conductor of an equally celebrated theatre—the Britannia in London, well known for its great pantomimes and at which most of the leading English stars appeared from 1850 to 1900.

His father, grandfather, great-grandfather, uncles and others for generations back made fame as comedians and pantomime artists. His tutelage for the stage began at the age of three under the direction of his father, Harry Lupino, then the most noted pantomime comedian of the London music halls. This apprenticeship was a thorough one and continued until finally, in the full maturity of his ability, a few years ago, the son took the crown from his father.

In September, 1920, at a Broadway theatre in New York, he made his American debut when the famous English production of "Afgar" opened there. With his original and screamingly funny pranks and acrobatic work he broke through the toughened shell of the blase first nighters and made them hold their sides in laughter. After the New York run he went on tour with "Afgar," remaining with it until he recently received word to begin work for Fox as the star of a new series of Lupino Lane comedies.

Paramount Christmas Releases

To Issue "Little Minister" and Pola Negri Feature

PARAMOUNT makes a generous Christmas gift to the picture public of America when it releases on December 25th Penrhyn Stanlaws production of Sir James M. Barrie's "The Little Minister," with Betty Compson in the stellar role, and Pola Negri in the UFA production, "The Last Payment."

The matter of choosing the players for the roles of Lady Babbie and Gavin in "The Little Minister" received long and careful attention from Mr. Stanlaws. The selection of a young woman to play Babbie presented an especially difficult problem, for the people of America particularly the lovers of Barrie, had come to think of her only as Maude Adams, America's foremost stage star, had portrayed her. The selection of Miss Compson is said to have proved to be the ideal one and her portrayal, Paramount says, is certain to rank with the greatest artistic achievements in all the history of the screen. George Hackathorne as Gavin, the little minister, is said to give such a splendid performance as to cause him to share the honors almost equally with the star.

The story, so well known through America, deals with the romance between Lady Barbara Rintoul, daughter of a Scottish lord, who secretly impersonates a gypsy, and the young minister in the quaint village of Thrums. With a most delightful background designed by Robert M. Haas, who was responsible for the settings of "Sentimental Tommy," "The Little Minister" offers a great variety of quaint and colorful costumes. English soldiers of the period of 1830, constables, Scotch weavers and peasantry, lords and ladies, mingle in a most picturesque medley of color and design, so far as costumes go. Miss Compson for the most part wears a most becoming gypsy garb, while George Hackathorne, with his tight-fitting trousers, high hat and frock coat is a quaint figure indeed.

An admirable scenario was provided by Edfrid Bingham and much credit is also due Thompson Buchanan, who supervised the production. The members of the supporting cast, all seen in character roles, include Edwin Stevens, Nigel Barrie, Will R. Walling, Guy Oliver, Fred Huntly, Robert Brower, Joseph Hazelton and Mark Wilkinson.

Much interest centers in the Pola Negri production from UFA, "The Last Payment," in that it presents thte famous Polish star in the first modern role in which she has been seen in America. Magnetic to an extraordinary degree, she is here seen as a beautiful, ruthless frivolous woman who, after causing great trouble in the lives of others, pays the inexorable penalty. It is described as a most subtle screen characterization in a story of unusual strength.

The story was written by John B[illegible]nert and George Jacoby.

Four Assd. Exhibitor Releases

Features Announced for Distribution During January

FOUR productions are on the Associated Exhibitors line up for January. The first production of the new year is an Associated Exhibitors feature in six reels, entitled "The Unfoldment." The feature is billed as a George Kearn production, and is said to be a powerful drama of tremendous public appeal, based upon the power of faith. The cast of "The Unfoldment" includes Barbara Bedford, Florence Lawrence, Wm. Conklin, Chas. K. French and others. It is said to be genuinely good entertainment, gripping from first to last, heart interesting in its developments and superb in its inspirational climax. It will be released on January 1st.

On January 15th, Playgoers Pictures will offer one of the J. P. McGowan features entitled, "Reckless Chances." It is in five reels, and was directed by Mr. McGowan who, in taking the stellar role, is supported by a new leading woman, Miss Dorothy Wood, as well as Andrew Waldron and Robert Walker. The title, "Reckless Chances," conveys a suggestion as to the daredevil stunts and heart-stopping thrills which characterize this production. It is a rousing railroad story, to which Mr. McGowan has given the best of his railroad thrills, gained through long experience in directing productions of this sort.

On January 22nd, Associated Exhibitors will present as an Associated feature, the Al. and Ray Rockett production, "Handle With Care." Associated Exhibitors, Inc., has particularly directed the attention of exhibitors to this drama, which is declared to be one of the finest produced features of the month. Particular care was taken in the production details and, as a result, "Handle With Care" has a high-class tone in its settings and atmosphere, which distinguish it as an unusual attraction. The cast is large and includes many names of distinct box-office value, such as Grace Darmond, Harry Meyers, Wm. Courtleigh, James Morrison, Lander Stevens, Harry Todd, Ruth Miller and Eugenie Ford. As suggested by its title, "Handle With Care" is a delightful drama, enlivened by much clever comedy and by brilliant titles.

On January 29th comes the Playgoers Pictures attraction, "Sunshine Harbor," in which Margaret Beecher is starred. A story of a girl's estrangement from her father, and her experiences as a newspaper woman in New York, is the foundation of this feature, which has a climax of sympathetic, heart-touching appeal.

Gladys Walton in "Playing with Fire," a Universal release

Ray Touring South

After more than three weeks of continuous activity in New York City, Charles Ray left the big city Saturday of last week for a brief tour of the South. Mr. and Mrs. Ray, accompanied by Richard Willis, Albert A. Kidder, Jr., Arthur S. Kane and George Rizard, camera man, will make short stop-overs in Washington, Baltimore, Atlanta and New Orleans. The star plans to return to his Los Angeles studio on December 28th.

Gunning Press Book on "White Hands" Ready

The exploitation department of Wid Gunning, Inc., has just issued on the new Hobart Bosworth release, "White Hands," a press book alive with exploitation suggestions.

The strength of this title for exploitation purposes is shown in all articles in this press sheet. A number of novelties with pull are being made for this picture, including a stiff paper herald in the shape of a cutout hand, and a white hand sticker. The herald, it is suggested, may well be used in making up a white hand lobby display in conjunction with compo board cutouts of a white hand and of the paper. An unusual teaser campaign is suggested, and there are many other angles of exploitation laid out for the use of the live exhibitor.

Universal-Jewel Bookings in Record Speed

Joe Friedman, manager of the Detroit Universal Exchange, has established a record for quick booking on the three latest Universal-Jewel productions. Within four weeks after receiving prints on "Conflict," "The Fox," and "No Woman Knows," Mr. Friedman closed contracts for the three pictures in all of the key towns in Michigan, Universal reports.

Board of Review Lists First Nat'l Pictures

THREE Associated First National attractions are included in "the five most significant photoplays of 1921" which forms the basis of an article by James Shelley Hamilton in "Exceptional Photoplays," the organ of the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures.

The three pictures are "All for a Woman," "The Kid" and "A Small Town Idol." In addition, a fourth First National attraction, "Gypsy Blood" is termed a better rendition of Merimee's story of "Carmen" than the opera or the other two picturizations of it.

Review Board Honors "Enchantment"

Marion Davies' latest release, "Enchantment," has been named by the National Board of Motion Picture Review, one of the five exceptional pictures of November. After briefly outlining the story, the reviewe continues:

"The story is pleasantly told and Miss Davies, besides wearing the usual lavish wardrobe, acts a part eminently suited to her, with sincerity.

"It is a part of the plot to give an amateur performance of the story of the princess who falls into an enchanted sleep from which the one and only prince is destined to awaken her with a kiss. This is the best part of the picture. The sets are by Urban and succeed in creating a fairyland atmosphere. The scene of the enchantment is done in black and white and shows the fairies in silhouette hovering over the cradle of the princess, an excellent medium for this subject. Someday, perhaps, Mr. Urban will do an entire picture in silhouette for us."

Griffith Changes Title of "Two Orphans"

D. W. Griffith has changed the title of his new film production from "The Two Orphans" to "Orphans of the Storm." Under that title it will be exhibited at the Apollo theatre, New York, opening Friday night, December 30.

Although costly and disturbing, the change, it is explained, is made to avoid even greater confusion with three other films bearing the title "The Two Orphans," which various promoters are now offering to exhibitors.

Pauline Frederick in "Two Kinds of Women"

The film editors at the R-C studios in Hollywood are working on Pauline Frederick's latest picture, a film adaptation of Jackson Gregory's novel, "Two Kinds of Women." The Frederick company is said to have obtained some beautiful scenic effects in the wooded mountainous slopes of the California Sierras. The picture was directed by Colin Campbell.

Elaborate Aids for R-C Week

Country-Wide Publicity Planned to Help Exhibitor

ELABORATE preparations have been made and are being put into effect by R-C Pictures for the national observance of R-C Pictures Week, which this year falls in the week beginning February 5, and ending February 11.

Co-operating with Charles R. Rogers, general manager of distribution, and his staff, is the entire publicity and advertising department of the organization, which will put forth its best efforts to obtain nation-wide publicity that is designed to be of direct aid to the exhibitor participating in the week's showings of R-C Pictures.

R-C Pictures announce that it will purchase the fifty best stories or essays of not more than 200 words each, dealing with R-C Pictures, that are offered to the organization. The amount to be paid for these manuscripts, which will be available for use in advertising and publicity text issued by the organization, will be $1000. For the best manuscript submitted, $200 will be paid; for the second best, $150; for the third best, $100; for the fourth best, $50; for the fifth, $35 will be paid; the price to be paid for the sixth is $25, and forty-four others ranking next in merit will be purchased at $10 each.

Slides will be issued to the exhibitors announcing the details, for use long in advance of R-C Pictures Week, in order that the information may be widely disseminated.

Other slides will be supplied to exhibitors, to be shown just ahead of R-C Pictures, advising the public that the picture to be shown is an R-C Picture, and that it may be described in the manuscripts to be submitted for purchase. These slides will be given to the exhibitors free of charge.

Heralds outlining the details of the story purchase plan will be distributed free in large quantities to the exhibitors, for general distribution to the public without charge. The slides and heralds have already been forwarded to the R-C Pictures exchanges and now are available to exhibitors.

One-sheets announcing the story purchase plan, for use in lobby displays and on billboards, also have been placed in the exchanges and will be supplied to exhibitors with other advertising accessories and aids.

Window cards carrying the same message now are going forward.

Snipes are being distributed to all exchanges, for use on all billboard displays for R-C Pictures, tying up with the manuscript purchase plan. Exhibitors will be invited to snipe all their regular poster displays.

A special edition "Ye Towne Cryer", the exploitation organ of R-C Pictures, suggesting many novel and practical means of putting the pictures across during R-C Week—and every other week, is being issued. This has been prepared by a corps of expert exploitation men, who have devised many new ways of attracting attention and money—to the theaters that will have part in the general activities of the week.

In addition to the general advertising which is carried in the various fan magazines in their December issues, which already have been distributed, and are on the stands and in the hands of their subscribers, a two-page spread has been prepared to be run in the February and March issues of a large number of magazines. These will be on the stands and in the hands of subscribers in January and in the first week of February. These displays will call attention for the fans to R-C Pictures Week in a graphic manner, urging them to see R-C Pictures. The magazines that will carry this advertising are Photo-Play Magazine, Shadowland, Motion Play Magazine, Motion Picture Classic, Movie Weekly, Motion Picture Magazine, Moving Picture Stories, Picture Play Magazine, Film Fun, Film Play Journal and Photodrama.

Additional aids will be given free of charge to exhibitors booking a solid week of R-C Pictures, including all advertising accessories. This will apply to all theaters except first run houses that run R-C Pictures for a week. First run houses that run R-C Pictures for a solid week, with a solid week either immediately preceding or immediately following R-C Pictures Week also will be supplied with such accessories free of charge.

Tourneur Starts "Lorna Doone"

Production of Classic Will Be His Initial First Nat'l. Release

"LORNA DOONE" will be Maurice Tourneur's initial production for Associated First National release. Putting an end to more than a year of rumors and unofficial reports, a definite announcement to this effect was issued this week from the producer-director's headquarters, Culver City, Cal.

For the past ten months preparations have been actively under way for the screening of R. D. Blackmore's classic. Many of the most spectacular scenes of the story have already been filmed, several thousand feet for the prologue having been made early this summer. Arrangements for the filming of the remainder of the drama are so far perfected that Mr. Tourneur expects to complete the entire picture within the next two months or ten weeks.

Frank Keenan, noted dramatic star of both silent and spoken drama, will return to the studio stages after an absence of many months as "Sir Ensor Doone," the picturesque chief of "those Doones of Bagworthy Forest, the awe of all Devon and Somerset, outlaws, traitors, murderers."

Madge Bellamy has been selected for the title role of "Lorna Doone." Miss Bellamy, recognized as one of the most beautiful and talented young players on the screen, has appeared in leading roles of a number of recent Thomas H. Ince productions, and will soon be seen in a featured part in "Hail the Woman."

For the role of "John Ridd," the stalwart hero of the novel, Mr. Tourneur has chosen John Bowers, one of the most popular leading men of the silent drama and the featured player of numerous successful productions.

Mr. Tourneur is actively directing every scene of the story and exercising close personal supervision over the costuming and construction of the many enormous sets.

Scott R. Beal, president of the Assistant Director's Association, is acting in the assistant capacity to the director. Mr. Beal is regarded as one of the most capable aids on the West Coast, having assisted John Griffith Wray with "Hail the Woman" and other Thomas H. Ince productions.

Milton Menasco, who for several years has been associated with Mr. Tourneur as art director, has designed the settings for "Lorna Doone," in collaboration with Mr. Tourneur. Among the gigantic settings designed by Menasco are a replica of the vestibule of Westminster Abbey and the picturesque Doone Village. The working continuity of the story was written by Mr. Tourneur and Wyndham Gittens.

The production will be released by Associated First National, probably in the late Spring, as a special. While it will not be definitely decided until "Lorna Doone" is completed, Mr. Tourneur is planning to release it in not more than eight reels.

Record Run in Indianapolis for "The Sheik"

A NEW motion picture record has been set up in Indianapolis by George Melford's Paramount production, "The Sheik," according to the following telegram received at the Paramount home office from J. B. Dugger, branch manager at Indianapolis:

"'The Sheik,' now on second week at Ohio theatre, Indianapolis. Still doing capacity business and will be held over for third week which is the first time in the history of the city that any picture has run three consecutive weeks in a motion picture theatre. Receipts have passed 'Anatol,' which held previous record at the Ohio."

A similar necessity for an extended run was created in Baltimore, wnere "The Sheik" played at the Century theatre, Baltimore.

Exchange Staff Dined by Paramount Heads

The executives and salesmen of the Famous Players-Lasky New York Exchange were the guests of Paramount home office executives at a dinner given Thursday evening of last week in the Blue Room of the Hotel McAlpin. The affair was in honor of the success scored by the exchange during the week ending December 10, when the largest volume of bookings as well as the largest cash collections in any single week in the history of the Exchange were recorded.

Among those who were present and spoke were E. E. Shauer, assistant treasurer; S. R. Kent, general manager of distribution; G. B. J. Frawley, G. E. Akers, H. E. Elder, Jerome Beatty and F. V. Chamberlin from the home office and H. H. Buxbaum, Harry Danto and Paul Swift from the Exchange.

George Baker to Direct Gareth Hughes Again

Preparations for the filming of Gareth Hughes's next Metro starring picture, an adaptation of Blanche Brace's Saturday Evening Post story, "The Adventures of a Ready Letter Writer," have been started at the Mero studios in Hollywood.

George D. Baker who has directed Mr. Hughes in his four previous productions to be filmed by S-L Pictures for Metro, will produce the youthful star's new story.

This is Mr. Hughes's fifth starring picture since he was signed by Metro a year ago. "Garments of Truth," "The Hunch," "Little Eva Ascends" and "Stay Home" are those already produced.

Studio "Exteriors" Growing

Outstanding Feature of 1921 Is Decrease in Outdoor Locations

FEWER outdoor locations and more made in the studio—this was one of the outstanding art developments in motion pictures during 1921, according to Max Parker and Robert M. Haas, art directors for all Paramount pictures made in the United States.

There has been a marked increase in the tendency to build exteriors in the studios during the last year and do less location work. Excellent examples of this can be found in George Fitzmaurice's production of "Forever," an adaptation of "Peter Ibbetson" where all of the French exteriors were built in the Paramount Long Island studio; in "Miss Lulu Bett," a William DeMille production, in which the exterior and interior of the Deacom home were built on the stage at the Lasky studio in Hollywood; and in "Is Matrimony A Failure?" a special James Cruze comedy started at the Paramount West Coast studio late in November.

In this latter picture the modern tendency in combining exteriors and interiors probably is best illustrated. A street intersection of a modern town was built at the Lasky ranch, showing the principal business section of the town. The bank, hotel and butcher shop were so built that when the exterior scenes were "shot" the company could move into the buildings and photograph the interior scenes within the sets themselves.

This combination makes the continuity better, it was explained, and saves money in transportation and lighting. It gives the director much more latitude in filming his story than under the old plan where the company was transported to a location and then brought back to the studio for interior work.

Absolute realism is another development in motion picture settings, Robert Haas points out, the tendency being not toward more beautiful settings but more expressive.

"Settings must live up to the drama," he said. "There is no excuse for a setting unless it furnishes the proper kind of background for the characters in the picture."

"Molly O" Opens on Coast

Mabel Normand Feature Starts Extended Run at Mission Theatre

"MOLLY O" opened at the Mission theatre, Los Angeles, November 30, for an extended run. E. M. Asher, personal representative for Mack Sennett, now in New York, received a telegram from Harry David, managing director of the Mission theatre, as follows:

"'Molly O' received the greatest opening the Mission theatre has ever had. Crowd greater than 'Four Horsemen or 'Three Musketeers.' Picture went over to a flying start. You have no idea of the tremendous applause and appreciation shown it. Mr. Sennett is the happiest man in the world tonight. Critics give it longest and best reviews ever obtained by any picture here. Best regards."

Mr. Asher received another wire December 13th from Mr. David stating that "Molly O" has broken all records of the Mission theatre and that it would be held on 'till after the first of the year, which means that the picture will have over a month's run.

Excerpts of criticisms of the Los Angeles papers are as follows:

Monroe Lathrop in Evening Express: "The new film is just the kind that Mabel admirers like to see her in. She's funny and pretty and mischievous and abused. Those who like romance get it—those who like thrill stuff get that, and everybody gets good measure. It's an ideal part that was tailor-fitted to Mabel, and she's winsome and pert and animated after the fashion that won her first renown."

Florence Lawrence in Examiner: "In 'Molly O' Mr. Sennett has given the world a dainty wholesome story of humanity. The picture shows beautiful sets, excellent photography and many novelties in way of action."

Grace Kingsley in Time: "It just holds you and you laugh and cry and pay strained attention to the thrilling moments, that's all. To try to dissect it would be like tearing a flower to pieces to find the secret of its beauty and perfume. It is a comedy that lies at the heart of human nature. Everybody is going to like 'Molly O' this latest and assuredly best picture in which Miss Normand has ever played or which Mack Sennett has ever produced."

Guy Price in Herald: "When I say that the distinguished gathering at the Mission theatre last night was pleased, understand me I am putting it mildly. No more appreciative crowd was jammed into an enclosure. There may be better Mabel Normand photoplays than "Molly O" but they haven't been made yet."

United Studios Co-operates with Producers

As a demonstration of the sincere desire of the United Studios to fully cooperate with its producer-tenants, M. C. Levee, President of United, has inaugurated a series of weekly conferences which are being attended by Mr. Levee and his department managers and the representatives of the organizations which make their productions under the new United plan of cooperative production control.

The newly adopted rental proposition, under which the producer is charged a flat fee per picture, is a radical departure from the former Brunton cost-plus method, and Mr. Levee has arranged the regular weekly "get-together" as the logical means of assurance of the smooth working-out of the plan through the medium of the open forum.

The first of these meetings, which was presided over by Mr. Levee, was attended by representatives of Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, Joseph M. Schenck, who controls the Norma Talmadge and Constance Talmadge units; Mme. Nazimova, Jackie Coogan Productions, Allen Holubar, Richard Walton Tully, Chester Bennett Productions, Benjamin B. Hampton, Lewis J. Selznick, J. L. Frothingham, Emory Johnson Productions and Hamilton-White Comedies.

Goldwyn Film at Capitol Christmas Week

The attraction at the Capitol Theatre Christmas week will be a Messmore Kendall production, released by Goldwyn, starring Vivian Martin, called "Pardon My French," a snappy farce-comedy.

The picture is a film version of a story by Edward Childs Carpenter, author of "The Cinderella Man" and other stage successes, entitled "Polly in the Pantry." Sidney Olcott, who directed "Scratch My Back' for Goldwyn, directed Miss Martin in this breezy comedy. The titles were written by Irvin S. Cobb and are in his happiest humorous style.

The supporting cast includes Thomas Meegan, Nadine Beresford, Ralph Yeasly, Grace Studiford, Walter McEwen and Wallace Ray.

Clara Beranger Returns to Lasky Studio

Clara Beranger, who has written three original stories for Paramount picture, "The Gilded Lily," "Exit the Vamp" and "The Husband's Trademark," has returned to the Paramount West Coast studio to adapt William de Mille's forthcoming production, "Bought and Paid For," which will be started before the New Year. Miss Beranger has been in New York for several months on a vacation and in search of material for more stories for Paramount.

Fannie Hurst Story for Cosmopolitan

Cosmopolitan Productions has begun the filming of another Fannie Hurst story. As yet the picture is unnamed and is known as Production 34. Frank Borzage, who directed "Humoresque" and "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford," is directing.

Those chosen so far for the picture are Dore Davidson, Vera Gordon and Miriam Battista, all of whom became famous through their work in "Humoresque," Blanche Craig and James Devine. Mr. Devine recently had an important part with Holbrook Blinn in the stage production of "The Bad Man."

Bright Outlook for Production

"THE quiet production period in Los Angeles seems to be a thing of the past, and while it is true that there are rumors of Metro, Goldwyn and Fox studio inactivity for a short period, there is a steadily increasing production on other lots.

"The general opinion is that 1922 will prove the banner year in Los Angeles production circles, and the indications certainly point that way."

That's the Christmas message Watterson R. Rothacker brings back from the West Coast. After spending eleven hours at his Chicago headquarters, Mr. Rothacker completed his trans-continental trip by "rothackering" to New York. With him he brought a whole sheaf-full of newsy items, which we'll give you in his own words. Speaking of Marshall Neilan's new picture, "Penrod," now virtually finished, Mr. Rothacker said:

"This picture will no doubt be the screen sensation of the year," predicted Mr. Rothacker. "It will be something even bigger than Neilan's greatest admirers expect of him, which means the box office attraction of the year.

"John Stahl is giving inspiration to a new picture which promises to be one of the best that has appeared under the Mayer-Stahl banner. Louis B. Mayer is forcasting great things for it. In the cast are Claire Windsor, Milton Sills and Henry Walthall. As I was leaving Anita Stewart was about to begin another production for Louis B. Mayer.

"Raoul Walsh at our Coast laboratory is doing the final editing of "Kindred of the Dust" which will appear soon on the First National program. All of the film colony were predicting a sensation for American audiences in H. O. Davis. "The Silent Call," an Associated Producers picture.

"Robertson-Cole confidence in the future is reflected in a most tangible manner at the R-C lot, various units buzzing with activity under the supervision of Mr. Tobin.

"Selig-Rork are working overtime and Sundays on an animal serial which promises to be bigger and more exciting than any predecessors. Selig-Rork expect to start soon on a big feature based on the book 'Debonnaire.'

"Sam and Jack Warner have greatly enlarged the Warner serial program, having under production an enormous serial in which most of the animals of Barnes Circus are being used. They have built a large and really realistic jungle back of their dark stages.

"Production is at its height at Mack Sennett studios. Everybody there is keyed up in the determination to follow up the success of "Molly O" with productions of equal calibre.

"They are very much on the job at Garson studios where, under the direction of Harry Garson, Clara Kimball Young is finishing a big feature which will be exploited in the East soon by Herbert Somborn.

"Arthur Sawyer of S-L Pictures will move production headquarters to United studios or Universal City when the Metro studios close down for the short period as announced.

"Finis Fox has completed an unusually fine picture of Northwestern Mounted Police atmosphere. President Schullberg is greatly enthused over the picture just finished by the beautiful Katherine MacDonald.

"M. C. Levee, head of United studios, formerly Robert Brunton studios, has inaugurated a period of exceptional activity. Virtually every stage in this great production center is engaged, among those operating there being Norma and Constance Talmadge, Allan Holubar, Pimmy Young and Hamilton White Comedies. One of the outstanding figures in the Coast Colony at present is Joe Schenck, who has expressed the intention of remaining until late spring, personally to supervise the Norma Talmadge, Constance Talmadge and Buster Keaton companies which he controls."

Hunt Stromberg Unit Busy

Two Doris May Vehicles Ready in Time for Release Early in 1922

ADVICES from the R-C Pictures Studios on the West Coast indicated a hum of productional activity for the Hunt Stromberg unit, with "Boy Crazy" and "Gay and Devilish" starring Doris May, in course of production and preparations for their release along the early months of the New Year.

"Boy Crazy," now nearing completion, is an original story by Beatrice Can. Exploring into the new fields of farce-comedy, the forthcoming picture, to follow "Eden and Return" in order of distribution, narrates the exciting experiences of a little lady who opens a haberdashery shop for men—just to prove to a certain young man, who operates a style salon for ladies, that her home town and its home talent can compete with any form of modern business. Underlying the central idea and big situations is a swiftly moving melodramatic plot which deals with mystery, suspense and thrills in a way altogether new to screenfare. The character of the plot clears the way for innumerable comedy exploits and Hunt Stromberg and Director William A. Seiter have made the most of the opportunities. In the cast with Miss May are Harry Myers, Otto Hoffman, Fred Gamble, Gertrude Short, Frank Kingsley. "Billy" Elmer, and Edward Brady.

"Gay and Devilish," the fourth release of the Doris May attractions is an original story from the versatile pen of Charles A. Logue, whose screen and stage successes are numbered by the dozens. It is being adapted for the screen by Garrett Elsden Fort. "Gay and Devilish" refers to a strictly up-to-date girl whose blunders that it requires a stout-hearted and iron-fisted lover, one perfectly aggravated uncle, and a flock of other interested ones to extract her from the wreckage.

Negotiations are now under way which will bring "Bull Montana and Otis Harlan, who appeared so successfully in 'The Foolish Age" cast, back in Miss May's support. Mr. Montana, it is reported will assume the role of an athlete who poses in gold and, bronze, for the benefit of Jackie's art career.

"Conflict" Big Universal Success

"CONFLICT," the Priscilla Dean super-production from George Budington Kelland's popular Red Book Novel, has proved to be the most successful Universal-Jewel picture in many months, announces that company. The Universal sales department reports that the picture had had remarkable runs in every theatre where booked, and has broken house records all over the country, in the face of unusual opposition programs.

Since its initial run of a month at the Central Theatre, New York, "Conflict" has been shown in leading houses in almost every key city in the country. In New York City alone, it has played to more than 120 days over the U. B. O. Circuit. Its aggregate run in Chicago has closely approximated the same length of time. In more than a hundred cities, the film has been shown for runs of a week or longer.

Officials of the Universal sales force point out that "Conflict" has achieved an unusual record for itself in playing five, six, and seven-days runs in theatres which heretofore have held strictly to split-week bookings. This has occurred in most cases by the exhibitor holding the picture over after watching his box-office during the original run of the film.

Among the theatres which have played "Conflict" for a week or more, are the "Palace, Buffalo; Rialto, Rochester; New Auditorium, Dayton; Walnut, Cincinnati; Express, Denver; Majestic, Grand Rapids; Colonial, Detroit; Liberty, Kansas City; Grand, Topeka; Imperial, San Francisco; Butterfly, Milwaukee; F & R, Minneapolis; Sun, Omaha; Strand, Washington; Majestic, Wilmington; Locust, Philadelphia; Hippodrome, Baltimore; Blackstone, Pittsburgh; Blue Mouse, Portland; Kinearn, Salt Lake; Clemmer, Seattle; Liberty, St. Louis; many leading Canadian theatres and scores of others in the United States.

Evidence of the surprising box-office results exhibitors have had with "Conflict" is shown by the letter of appreciation written to George D. Levine, manager of the Universal exchange in Milwaukee, by Harry Hart of the Butterfly Theatre, one of Milwaukee's leading photo-play houses. It is said to be a sample of countless other letters and telegrams received by Universal since "Conflict" was received.

"I have seen every picture that Miss Dean has made heretofore," wrote Hart, "and always considered her one of America's foremost screen artists, but I never knew that she was the versatile performer she is. I saw her play in 'Outside the Law,' which I considered 'great'—I saw her play 'Reputation' in an entirely different character, and after seeing her play 'Conflict,' in an entirely different role, I must say that the Universal Film Company has a masterpiece in this picture.

"I feel duty bound to tell you that I think this picture will be one of the best box-office attractions ever exhibited in a theatre, and nothing but the elements of the weather, which we cannot control, will prevent me from having a big profit week."

At the Clemmer Theatre, Seattle, "Conflict" did the biggest business in the history of the theatre, during the worst snow-storm in the history of the city, it is said. During the midst of the blizzard, there was a line-up half-a-block long all afternoon in front of the Clemmer, it is stated by Universal, on authoritative reports from the West Coast. During the first week's run of the picture at the Clemmer, the picture played to more than 30,000 persons, despite the fact the Clemmer has a seating capacity of less than a thousand.

J. D. Williams Busy in Los Angeles

J. D. Williams, manager of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., returned to Los Angeles recently from San Francisco, where he spent three days in conference with theatre owners in the Golden Gate district. Upon his return, Mr. Williams conferred with Producers Marshall Neilan and R. A. Walsh and viewed the latest photoplays made by those directors. Both Mr. Neilan's recently completed "Penrod" and Mr. Walsh's "Kindred of the Dust" created an excellent impression upon First National's general manager. "Penrod" and "Kindred of the Dust" will be shipped to New York in a few days.

During his stay in Los Angeles Mr. Williams had interviews with all the independent producers releasing their photoplays through First National.

Richard Walton Tully in "Masquerader"

Richard Walton Tully has returned to Los Angeles to begin preparations for the production of his famous stage play, "The Masquerader," in film form for release by Associated First National. In this play Mr. Tully is so fortunate as to have the assistance of Guy Bates Post, one of the most famous stars of the speaking stage, who will make his advent in the world of cinema in the famous dual role, in which he has consistently broken all theatrical records on the stage.

"Man's Home" Scoring Heavily

IN the pre-season announcement made by Lewis J. Selznick he promised, in addition to his four-star series and the Talmadge reissues, six specials to complete the "Forty from Selznick" that were to come to the screen during the current season. Two of the specials have been completed—"A Man's Home" has been released and "Conceit" is ready to be launched. Two more specials have been definitely decided upon and decision will be made as to their production when Myron Selznick, vice-president in charge of production, returns from his present European trip.

"A Man's Home" the first of the Selznick six, and a Ralph Ince production, was given its Broadway opening at the Capitol theatre, subsequent to showings in most of the larger cities throughout the country. When "A Man's Home" was ready for release the schedule at the Capitol was completed several weeks in advance and that is why the first opportunity to play the Selznick special came the week before Christmas.

In the dullest week of the theatrical year, when theatre-goers were thinking more of Christmas shopping than they were of their customary amusement, "A Man's Home" opened at the Capitol, Sunday, December 18. A sensational hold-up of the theatre treasury on the opening night attracted uncommon attention to the largest theatre in the world and $10,000 was mentioned as the proceeds of the raid. Showmen were of the opinion that as an "attractor" front-page stories in all the New York papers might be expected to favorably influence business during a proverbially hard week for theatricals.

"A Man's Home," meanwhile, had played all of the larger cities throughout the country (with the exception of Philadelphia) and on the same date the picture opened at the New York Capitol the Stanley Theatre opened the Selznick special at the theatre which is the pride of the circuit—the Stanley, Philadelphia, Boston, Chicago, San Francisco and other big cities had previously initiated the run of "A Man's Home" in the great surrounding territories so that Ralph Ince production may be now accepted as going full speed ahead across screens of the land.

Now comes the Selznick drive to put "Conceit" across as a successor to "A Man's Home" in theatres that are unfettered by producer control or ownership. "Conceit" is the second Selznick specials, a feature directed by Burton George and produced almost entirely in the Canadian Rockies. Myron Selznick sent Mr. George and his company to Banff, Alberta, and there several weeks were spent in photographing the dramatic action with the grandeur of the mountains and the wilds of the forest serving as nature's back-grounds.

Mrs. De Wolf Hopper, known on the dramatic stage as Hedda Hopper, and now leading woman in "Six Cylinder Love," running this season at the Harris Theatre, plays opposite William B. Davidson in leading the cast of "Conceit." William B. Davidson has been a screen lead in many important productions and with Selznick previously played opposite Elaine Hammerstein in "The Girl from Nowhere." Maurice Costello is cast for an important part, and Warren Cooke, Charles Gerard and Patrick Harrigan are also in the cast. "Conceit" is now in the various Select exchanges and the sales drive is on for showings early in January.

The production of John Galsworthy's "Justice" and a new presentation of "The Easiest Way" are promised as to the four Selznick special still to be distributed. Myron Selznick, now in England, is paying special attention to the details of correctness in "atmosphere" that is to be created for the screen version of "Justice." Artists are with him making sketches of London's famous court rooms and will visit England's prisons and there sketch interiors that will supply production details with authenticity.

Ralph Ince has been decided upon as the director to produce "Justice" and the same director will doubtless make the production of the famous Eugene Walters play, "The Easiest Way," in which David Belasco is now presenting Frances Starr on tour in a revival of the great stage success that Selznick presented on the screen when it was originally offered by Belasco. There will be an entirely new screening of "The Easiest Way"—and not a reissue of the first Selznick presentation.

Next Selznick Special, "Conceit," Scheduled for January

"The Fox" a Success

"The Fox," a Universal-Jewel production starring Harry Carey, is being heralded by exhibitors throughout the country as one of the greatest "westerns" ever filmed, Universal reports. The picture is now playing some of the biggest theatres in the United States and Canada, and, according to information received by the Universal sales department, is filling these houses in the face of stiff opposition programs.

"The Fox" opened at the Central Theatre, Broadway and 47th street, Sunday, December 19, for an indefinite run. Due to a previous booking for "Molly O" at the Central, it was not possible to show "The Fox" there immediately after its release date.

It is receiving a Broadway presentation in keeping with its success in other parts of the country. Manager Cobe, of the Central Theatre is staging a unique prologue for the lively super-western.

"The Fox" is the first "super-western" picture ever attempted by Universal. All the care and expense put into the production of any Universal-Jewel special was given to the making of "The Fox." In addition, it is the first Universal-Jewel in which Harry Carey has ever appeared.

Already "The Fox" has been shown in many U. B. O. houses in and around New York City, including the pick of the Keith, Proctor and B. S. Moss circuits.

Huge Records Claimed for "Over the Hill"

"HARD times" are evidently "good times" for the Fox photoplay, "Over the Hill," and it is estimated by Fox Film officials that the picture will be seen by 80,000,000 persons in America.

It was shown in New York for twelve months to 2,500,000 persons, and the receipts were approximately $769,000, according to the Fox home office. It played in Chicago, Philadelphia, Boston, Pittsburgh, and Milwaukee altogether for 27 weeks, and the receipts are reported to have totaled nearly $350,000. The attendance in Chicago during a nine weeks' engagement was approximately 300,000, and nearly a million persons are stated to have seen it in Philadelphia.

In 18 other cities in the country nearly 3,000,000 paid to see the picture, according to Fox Film reports, and it is still running in many of the principal cities. Thus far the total receipts have been over $2,500,000, declares a statement issued by the William Fox headquarters during the week.

Campaigns for Gunning Picture

"WHAT Do Men Want?" the Lois Weber picture, released by Wid Gunning, is being provided with unusual exploitation and advertising campaigns throughout the country, with extraordinary cash-register results as a consequence, declare a statement from the Wid Gunning headquarters.

In St. Louis, a particularly timely and effective tie-up with merchants was put over by the exploitation forces or Skouras Brothers, in connection with the showing of that drama simultaneously at the New Grand Central and West End Lyric theatres.

Taking advantage of the fact that Christmas was approaching, and that thousands of women were asking themselves, "What do men want?" with reference to the purchase of Christmas gifts, the management of the theatres got in touch with a number of establishments selling goods suitable for men. These were asked, in making up their advertising copy, to apply the phrase of the title of the Lois Weber film.

The response was immediate, declares the Gunning statement. Clothing, furniture, automobile, men's furnishing establishments, even a transportation system, ensign in front of the house, which tered enthusiastically into the plan of cooperative advertising. The result was a full page of advertising, with the streamer head 'What Do Men Want?" and the theatre advertising in a prominent position in the center. Most of the advertisements around it started with the question "What Do Men Want?" then went on to give an answer to it, each according to the product it was boosting. The title thus was repeated half a dozen times, and the picture was hooked up securely with the livest subject of the day—Christmas shopping.

"What Do Men Want" Exploited in Mid-West Cities

An automobile parade of twenty-five cars through the principal streets of the city, with each car flaunting a large banner giving the name of the production and the theatres playing it, was arranged by the house management with several motor-car agencies, and attracted considerable attention.

In Chicago, at the Bijou Dream theatre, a couple of girls in overalls were put to work on a scaffold, painting a big 18 x 16 foot muslin fronts on probably one of the busiest streets in the world. The stunt drew vast crowds, which were increased by having the girls distribute Christmas cheer money coupons, supplied by the Chicago Tribune.

In Indianapolis, interest was aroused by placing a huge sign on the side of a street car, and sending it over the city transportation system, which covers all the main streets. The car stopped as long as possible in front of the Alhambra theatre, where "What Do Men Want?" was playing, thereby really extending the theatre lobby right out into the middle of the street. This modification of the street-car stunt proved extremely effective, and resulted in excellent business.

When "What Do Men Want?" played at the Lyric theatre, New York City, a ballyhoo that blocked the streets consisted in having a man and a woman, dressed in evening clothes, parade up and down Forty-second street and on Broadway. The woman wore a fur opera wrap around her shoulders, but every now and then it would slip down, revealing the low cut of her gown in the back, and the fact that on her shoulders were printed, in black letters the words "What Do Men Want?"

"A Man's Home" in Play Form for Stock

Anna Steese Richardson and Edmund Breese, authors of Selznick's special, "A Man's Home," have arranged with the Century Play Company to place their original play, on which the photo-drama was based, in dramatic stock repertoires for the winter and spring season. Because the photoplay has attracted so much attention, and because it will be generally shown during the coming months, the Century Play Company expresses great faith in the dramatization for stage revival among stock companies.

Selig-Rork Completes Big Year

With the completion of their first year of association, Colonel William N. Selig and Sam E. Rork have helped to make motion-picture history. Three big feats are to their credit.

Greatest of these is their superproduction of "The Rosary," which will be released January 16, by the Associated First National Pictures, Inc.

"'The Rosary,'" states Selig-Rork, "is destined to take its place as one of the finest and biggest pictures in production, story and cast that has ever been created, according to the critics who have previewed the picture in New York.

"This seven-reel feature production is an original screen story written by Bernard McConville and inspired by the theme of the famous stage classic by Edward E. Rose. It was directed by Jerome Storm, the man who directed Charles Ray in many of his successes.

"Imagine this all-star cast: Lewis Stone, Jane Novak, Wallace Beery, Robert Gordon, Eugenie Besserer, Dore Davidson, Pomeroy Cannon, Mildred June, Bert Woodruff, Harold Goodwin, Ann May, James Conway and Walt Whitman!

"The most unusual sensation of the past year was furnished by Selig and Rork when they revived the old and popular two-reel drama—and put it over.

"Instead of making the mistake which cost two-reelers their old popularity, that of relegating them to mediocre stories, production and players, Selig and Rork secured stories by world-famous authors and cast them with all-star players.

"At this writing, the two-reel dramas released through the Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., have not only scored a tremendous hit throughout the entire country, but have definitely re-established this form of screen entertainment."

"The Northern Trail" by James Oliver Curwood, was the first of these. Lewis Stone, Wallace Beery and Ethel Grey Terry are the stars. The second is "The Policeman and the Baby" by Clarence L. Cullen, with Wallace Beery, William Desmond and Elinor Fair in the cast. Mrs. Otis Skinner's famous Lambs' Club one-act prize play, "The Ne'er-To-Return Road" made the third hit, with Wallace Beery, Margaret McWade, Walt Whitman, Margaret Landis and Jack Mulhall. And the fourth of this series is one of James Oliver Curwood's most unusual stories, "The White Mouse" starring Lewis Stone, Wallace Beery, Ethel Grey Terry, Willard Louis and Bessie Wong. Bertram Bracken adapted and directed all of these successes.

The third Selig-Rork feat is the production of a big wild animal serial "The Jungle Goddess" which will be released by the Export and Import Film Company. Elinor Field and Truman Van Dyke are the featured players, and James Conway is directing.

Of paramount importance is the Selig-Rork announcement for 1922. A monster production of that world-famous romance, "Debonnaire," by William Farquhar Payson, has been started. Bernard McConville is adapting the book for the screen. Upon the completion of Rex Ingram's special production of "The Prisoner of Zenda," Lewis Stone will begin work in the leading role of "Debonnaire."

Snowy Baker, the Australian champion all-around athlete, makes his American debut under the Selig-Rork banner in a big production of "Sleeping Acres," by Brayton Norton, in the spring of 1922. His three Australian pictures are reported to be meeting with great success throughout the United States.

The Serial in the High-Class House

By A. A. Schmidt,

Short-Subject Sales-Manager, Universal Films

"THE Last Shall Be First and the First Shall Be Last:" Which means—you never can tell!

Serial pictures have been the exclusive property of the smaller theatre. The larger theatre has felt that its policy could not be bettered by running a serial.

It is different now. Today more and more high class houses are booking serial pictures. The reason for this is the slump in theatre attendance. People are not going to shows as they did. The exhibitor has got to have something big today on his screen to make money.

During the war days with everybody spending terrific sums of money, many of us thought every day was Christmas. Any old picture made money. It wasn't necessary to advertise. A one-sheet lobby did the trick.

Today, you've got to have a real product and you've got to tell everybody in the world about it before you can make any money. This is as it should be.

The new type of serial inaugurated by Universal, the "Winners of the West," which has the backing of educators far and wide, offers a type of serial picture that even the better house will break their time-worn policy for. The New York City Board of Education through Ernest L. Crandall, Director of Lectures and Visual Instruction, has endorsed "Winners of the West" for showing to children. Mr. Crandall says that:

"This is a big step forward in motion picture production. I feel that you are to be congratulated on the insight and vision which enabled your concern to treat a subject of genuine historic interest and importance and yet to retain all the elements of human interest and even hair raising thrills that are so essential to the serial form of picturization.

"There is no use closing your eyes to the fact that our boys and girls are bound to have the thrills and that any protracted showing of pictures which lack them and which does not link itself up with their nascent emotional life in some way, falls flat.

"To be able to give them these elements in a form that is clean and wholesome and with a background of interest in their own country and the struggle involved in its development, is not only a new but a big achievement.

"I sincerely hope that this is only the augury of more exertions of this commendable character."

The better class house was the last house in the world to buy a serial, twelve months ago—today it is the first.

The historical serial offers the following advantages to exhibitors:

1. A picture that appeals to children, because they like thrills. 2. A picture that appeals to educators, because it shows American history in the making. 3. A picture that appeals to parents, because it carries lessons in every reel valuable to children. 4. A type of picture on which a theatre owner can build up Good Will because he has eighteen chances to get his customers' money. 5. A picture on which "word of mouth" advertising grows with each showing.

In exploiting feature pictures, you can induce a person to see a picture but once. If he is crazy about it he might see it twice. On a serial you sell him eighteen shows. He comes back seventeen times after seeing the first episode. On ordinary advertised lines, the big value received from advertising is the repeat orders. The Good Will created by advertising a serial makes this type of picture the most valuable.

Good Will is what you have left after you have sold something to a person, gotten his money and he has left your store. It's your good chance of his coming back again for more.

When You consider what Good Will means to a serial, you realize that when you induce people to see the first episode by your advertising, you have really sold him eighteen shows instead of one. Many firms charge from sixty to ninety per cent of this advertising money to Good Will.

Here are a half a dozen well known companies with their total capitalization and the Good Will value of their names:

Firm Name	Capitalization	Good Will
National Cloak & Suit Co.	$17,000,000	$12,000,000
Wm. Wrigley Co., Jr.	16,500,000	6,000,000
Am. Tobacco Co.	154,010,000	54,099,430
Crane Co.	27,000,000	1,107,589
Coco Cola Co.	25,010,000	24,050,222
B. F. Goodrich Co.	99,600,000	57,798,000
Internat. Motor Truck Co.	16,673,900	2,351,943

Let me point out that in the Coco-Cola Co. where the product is completely consumed at the time of the sale, there is a "Good Will" value almost equal to the total capitalization. On the other hand, the Crane Co. with a capitalization almost the same as that of the Coco-Cola Co. has a Good Will of slightly over a million. The reason for this big difference is apparent when you consider that the product that is sold by the Crane Co. is very heavy duty machinery, a product on which there are very few repeat orders, while Coco-Cola is bought every day.

This leads us to this conclusion. The best product for a dealer to handle is one that must be replenished constantly and on which there are many sales to the same customer.

The only pictures produced today that correspond in general business lines to soft drinks, breakfast foods, candies, soaps, etc., are serials. When an exhibitor sells a serial to his patrons, he doesn't sell them one picture, but eighteen, for in selling them the first, he creates a desire in their minds to come in and see the other seventeen. And in fact the customer must see the entire eighteen episodes to get the complete story.

Now, this is plain logic. The writer has heard many exhibitors and in fact many film men, say that such and such houses cannot run a serial, etc., etc., and it is not his aim in this article to advance any arguments as to what houses can run a serial and what houses cannot. It is merely an attempt to point out the Good-Will building value of the historical serials as against the other product shown in theatres today.

The serial picture will be used more generally in the better theatres this winter.

The large house can seat enough people to make a highly advertised picture profitable.

The better class of people that want their children to see "Winners of the West" are insisting on better houses running them.

The better house can present a picture to better advantage and is more alive to the possibilities of local tie-ups with Boards of Education, Women's Clubs, etc. Censorship has no terrors for this serial picture.

The day of the serial picture has arrived. They will do for the big exhibitor this winter what they have done for years for the small exhibitor; bring his audience back again week after week, month after month.

Mae Murray Given Big Welcome in Havana

Havana has gone wild over Mae Murray, who arrived recently in the Cuban capital to make scenes for a forthcoming picture, "Fascination," a Tiffany production for release through Metro.

The crowds at the dock when the blonde star's steamer was warped in were so dense that not only the police were called upon to keep them in check, but two companies of the military.

On account of the high pitch of public interest in her presence in Havana, it is not unlikely that Miss Murray and Robert Z. Leonard, her husband and director, who is to supervise the filming of "Fascination," will seek out some quieter place of abode than one of the principal hotels.

New Studio for Miami, Fla.

THE name of Miami for the past decade has been associated with some big commercial enterprises, and the erection, on 140 acres at the western suburb of Hialeah, of a complete plant for picture production by the Miami Studios, Inc., crowns the efforts of its progressive citizens.

Six stage buildings having dimensions of 80 feet by 250 feet, will each carry two stages 60 by 125 feet and complete accommodation for two producing companies at the same time.

Special attention has been given to the accoustics of these buildings, in order that these can produce simultaneously without fear of interruption.

Adequate dressing rooms with private baths, offices, projecting rooms, editorial rooms, camera men's headquarters and fireproof film vaults are part of the equipment of each building.

Each stage is to be supplied with eight-tube Cooper-Hewitt lights in addition to a complete equipment of arcs and spotlights. A 75 kilowatt portable electrical plant will be provided for the use of companies taking scenes on locations.

An Edison plant, 35 by 80 feet will furnish a powerful direct current for the entire group of studios. The dynamos will be driven by a MacIntosh-Seymour-Diesel engine. The first units of the electrical plant will be set up immediately upon completion of the first stage building.

The laboratory building will be 40 by 75 feet and a full equipment for developing and printing of films will be installed. The laboratory will be for the use of studio tenants exclusively, and is calculated to take care of all the films which twelve producing companies, working at one time, can turn out.

The workshop, 60 by 200 feet, also shown in the picture, in which will be manufactured all scenic sets and special furniture required from picture production, will be equipped with the latest wood-working machinery.

A warehouse, 50 by 200 feet, for the storage of scene sets, props, decorations and costumes, and an administration building where the executive offices of the Miami Studios, Inc., will be located, will complete the group of buildings.

The entire construction work is under the personal supervision of Ted J. Bevis, formerly of Los Angeles and now a permanent resident of Hialeah. The Miami Studios will be ready to receive companies early in 1922.

Big Publicity Tie-Up for Witwer Comedies

In anticipation of its early release of "The Leather Pushers," a super-series of two-reelers made by H. L. Messmore from the series of prize ring stories by H. C. Witwer, Universal has arranged several excellent publicity and exploitation tie-ups by which the series will be popularized all over the country.

The main tie-up is with Collier's, the National Magazine which recently published the series as the outstanding feature of the magazine. The series is to be known as the Universal - Jewel - Collier's Series. Beginning almost immediately, every news stand handling Collier's will become a booster for the two-reelers. In addition, every house-to-house canvasser for Collier's will be instructed to bring to the attention of all persons interviewed, the moving picture adaptation of the Collier story. Each will have literature to distribute concerning the film. Both news-stands and house-to-house agents will be used in tie-ups with local exhibitors who show the series.

"Eden and Return" Released Christmas Day

"Eden and Return," Doris May's second starring vehicle for R-C Pictures, is scheduled for release by that organization on Christmas Day, after which date it has been booked by many of the important circuits of the country.

Miss May's second production, supervised by Hunt Stromberg and directed by William A. Seiter, is based upon the stage comedy of the same name which was written by Ralph E. Renaud and produced in New York and other big cities several years ago.

Laughs are the main idea in "Eden and Return" and Mr. Stromberg chose the following cast to develop the comedy: Emmett King, Earle Metcalf, Margaret Livingston, Margaret Campbell, Buddy Post, Gerald Pring and Frank Kingsley. Beatrice Van adapted the Renaud comedy to the screen, paying particular heed to the development of the many comic situations.

To Extend Facilities of Fox News Abroad

Don Hancock, director-in-chief of Fox News, and Russell A. Muth, the star camaraman of the New York staff, sailed for Europe aboard the steamship Paris December 14th.

The purpose of the European trip of Messrs. Hancock and Muth is the execution of plans by William Fox for an extension of facilities for filming European news events. With this object in view, he directed Mr. Hancock to inspect the foreign offices and to reorganize and enlarge the overseas staff wherever it is possible to improve on the already high level efficiency of the Fox News gathering organization.

The exclusive filming of Ex-Emperor Charles of Austria, while under arrest and on his way to exile was a recent example of the wisdom of Mr. Fox in maintaining a large force of staff correspondents in Europe. This force now will be expanded to include every centre of importance.

United Studios Popularity Grows

THE new plan of co-operative production control adopted by the United Studios, Inc., which is taking over the immense Robert Brunton plant in Los Angeles, has not only proved a great stimulus to production, but has aroused interest of the Los Angeles banks to the extent that they have indicated they will be more willing to negotiate with producers who seek capital to produce under this policy.

The producer, through the new plan, is charged a flat fee per picture, which is determined in advance by negotiation and is based on the class of production and the number of pictures to be produced. Labor is provided on an hourly basis, at cost, and material is furnished at wholesale cost at twenty-five per cent. under the market because of the cooperative buying power of the studios. Under such a policy the producer knows before he commences production within a few dollars of how much his picture is to cost him.

The United plan has attracted such big Eastern producers as Joseph M. Schenck and Lewis J. Selznick. Mr. Schenck recently closed his New York studios and came West with Norma Talmadge and Constance Talmadge, and work was immediately begun at United Studios on the Constance Talmadge production of Edgar Selwyn's "The Divorcee," under the direction of Sidney Franklin.

Mr. Selznick is sending to the Coast a special unit which will begin its series with the picturization of Eugene Walter's "The Easiest Way," and shortly afterward Elaine Hammerstein, Eugene O'Brien and Owen Moore will establish themselves at the United Studios with their production units. Richard Walton Tully is still another Eastern producer who will make a series of pictures at United Studios.

In discussing the newly adopted plan, M. C. Levee, President of the United Studios, Inc., said:

"The reorganization of these studios is being met with hearty approval, as is demonstrated by the class of independent producing units actually operating in our studios. The Los Angeles financial institutions, after carefully scrutinizing the new United Studios plan of operation, have indicated that they will be more willing to negotiate with producers who seek capital to produce under this policy.

"Here is a summary of the organization and production facilities which are included under the blanket charge to the producer:

"Services of department heads, including the exclusive services of an art director of the regular studio staff, also the Art and Technical Director and assistant; the Property Superintendent, Chief Electrician, Transportation Manager, Casting Director and assistant: Location Manager, Purchasing Agent and Storekeeper;

"Janitor and general watchman services; office accommodations, including telephone service; stage space, projection room, including service of operator; cutting rooms, concrete vault for negative and film; dressing rooms for cast and extras; special suites completely furnished for stars; storage facilities for props, scenery, etc.;

"Studio grounds, including approximately thirty-three and one-half acres for exterior settings;

"Mechanical devices in mill, electrical, blacksmith and tin shops, including over twenty different kinds of machines;

"Permanent exterior street scenes and settings belonging to this company, including the Mexican street with patio and hacienda adjoinment; New England or Southern street, Early Western street, New York City dock street, New York or London tenement district; London alley and side street, street of India, large French Chateau, concrete tank of 200,000 gallon capacity and all settings belonging to companies operating in these studios;

"Stock scenery units, including office sets, bank sets, library sets, bedroom sets, jail partitions, ship beams and cabins, wainscoting, flats, pilasters, columns, newel posts, stairways, balusters, balustrades, door frames and doors, fire places, Western bars, window frames and windows, arches, openings, ornamental period hardware, miscellaneous backings, diffusers, parallels, canvasses and velvets, reflectors, rope nets, rain effects;

"Draperies, including portieres and curtains of every description;

"Properties, including period, modern and character furniture, tapestries, pictures, electrical fixtures, hand props, palms, plants and flowers, box cars, fire engines, gondolas, canoes, period vehicles;

The Need for the Big Picture

By S. R. Kent, General Manager of Distribution, Famous-Players-Lasky Corporation

NEVER before in the history of this industry has the American public been shopping for good pictures to the extent it is now. The day of "Let's go to a movie!" has gone. "Let's go and see 'The Affairs of Anatol,' or 'The Sheik,' or 'Fool's Paradise' is taking its place."

The public of today is a wiser public than it was a few years ago or a year ago. It has learned, through experience, that some pictures are great, some are good, some fair and some bad. And it has learned also to separate the wheat from the chaff.

Some people unthinkingly declare that this is due entirely to the fact that money is tight. This is not altogether correct, for last year—in a "period of depression," mind you—more box-office records were established than ever before. These box-office records were made by big pictures, and the only conclusion to draw is that the public would rather see one big picture—and will pay more money to see it—than it would to see three weak pictures. It is a question of how much they can get for their money; if they get their money's worth they will pay for their entertainment gladly and in great numbers.

But there is another reason for this "show me" disposition. That is, people have learned that, whereas a short time ago the really big pictures were as rare as wild flowers in December, today they are actually numerous.

This shopping for pictures has passed on as a habit to the exhibitors. They have found that little pictures will no longer attract big audiences. So they, too, are shopping.

Thus the problem of the exhibitor has become at the same time both simplified and complicated. It has become simpler, because in the picture market he is being offered an ever-increasing supply of big pictures to satisfy the growing demands of his patrons. It has become more complicated for the plain reason that the big picture—the picture that the public now demands—costs more money to produce than the little one, and consequently it necessarily costs the exhibitor more money in rentals.

Let us look for a moment at what some of our big pictures have done at the box-offices during the past few months. I mention, of course, only Paramount pictures, for they are the only ones I am directly interested in or of which I have definite knowledge. Cecil B. DeMille's "Forbidden Fruit," one of the finest, biggest and most costly productions we have ever released, smashed records right and left. We followed it up with Mr. DeMille's "The Affairs of Anatol," with its twelve stars and lavish production of a great story. Released day and date, immediately following a tremendous smash of national advertising, in more than two hundred leading theatres, it has set up new records of attendance and receipts in hundreds of houses. Then came "The Sheik," which in nearly every instance is surpassing the remarkable record of "Anatol."

Now and then an exhibitor has written in that he failed to make money with one or another of these big productions. Granting that he had good weather and other local conditions were favorable—did he advertise properly? Did he apply sufficient, sound exploitation? Did he raise his admission prices to a figure that the public would gladly have paid, even expected to be asked to pay? Did he create the proper public respect for his big picture?

If he can answer those questions honestly in the affirmative there is something wrong with that exhibitor's management. And I think I know what his chief trouble is. He is carrying too much overhead. He is giving his people too much stuff that they don't care about, and as a result he is not giving them enough of what they really want. Except in the big downtown houses in the larger cities where audiences are transient, it is a waste of money for an exhibitor to try to run a glorified vaudeville show. Picture fans want good pictures and that is the primary reason for their patronage of the picture theatre. If they wanted vaudeville they would seek a vaudeville house. If they wanted opera they would go to an opera house.

I venture to say that in 95 per cent of the cases where exhibitors are not getting a proper return on their investments it is on account of the conditions I have cited above. As to the other 5 per cent, I bow to their knowledge of local conditions which I do not possess.

The day of the big picture is here. There are a lot of them and there are going to be more. We have seen "The Affairs of Anatol," "The Sheik" "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford," "Deception," "The Great Moment," "Experience." And we have on hand "The Little Minister," "Saturday Night." "Fool's Paradise," "Miss Lulu Bett," "The Husband's Trademark," "Just Around the Corner," "Boomerang Bill," "The Law and the Woman," "Forever," "The Champion," "Three Live Ghosts," "Moran of the Lady Letty," "The Man from Home" and others.

With the public demanding big pictures, and with a truly remarkable supply of big pictures ready to satisfy this demand, the question naturally arises as to what the exhibitor plans to do for the distributor who does not want to put his big productions into legitimate houses.

It is obvious to all that the backbone of the picture industry is the motion picture theatre, and unless the picture theatre is prosperous the rest of the industry must suffer But in the coming year the prosperity of the theatre will depend on the manner in which it handles the big pictures.

Is the exhibitor doing the right thing by himself, the producer and his public if he handles a picture like "Fool's Paradise" on the same He is not—for a number of reasons. In the first place, the public doesn't expect him to. If the exhibitor respects his big pictures and shows that respect through increased prices, increased advertising and a longer run his public will reflect that respect by increased attendance. If the exhibitor does not get the money, through increased admission prices and a longer run, he is not offering encouragement to the producer to make more big pictures. And at the same time he himself is losing actual money at the box-office.

Underselling one's product to the public is just as fatal as over-selling it. And underselling not only affects a distinct loss at the box-office, but it also means loss of prestige to the picture before it has a chance to establish its worth in the public mind.

If the motion picture exhibitor is to get the maximum of benefit from the big pictures offered him this coming year he must have a pliable policy both as to admission prices and as to length of run. If exhibitors have a policy which will enable them to get the full benefit from big pictures, they need have no fear of distributors putting the big attractions into legitimate houses, for then the picture theatre will be able to absorb the biggest picture ever made.

I am not an exhibitor and never have been one. Neither have you exhibitors ever been picture distributors, but we are both salesmen and we both are in the business of selling pictures. All I have had to say has been confined strictly to the subject of salesmanship, and the big picture is what we both have to sell from now on. My ideas are offered merely in a spirit of helpfulness, not of criticism, and they are based on a knowledge of what can be done, has been done and must be done.

A set which will be a duplicate of the old Drury Lane Theatre in London, is being built at the William Fox New York studio. It is in a picture William Farnum is making, and more than 200 extras will be used in the interior scenes.

4 Pathe Serials for 1922

"White Eagle" Due Jan. 1st; Two New Serials Already Under Way

SERIALS figure largely in the plans of Pathe Exchange, Inc. for 1922. At least four big new ones are promised for release during the coming year. Charles Hutchison is the strenuous "stunt star" of one which is now well along in production with preparations all made for its successor. "White Eagle", starring Ruth Roland in her tenth Pathe serial, is announced for release on January 1st. "White Eagle" was produced by Hal Roach.

The Pathe heads are emphatic in their declaration that Pathe serials never were in greater public demand than at the present time. "Hurricane Hutch" booked its full quota in nearly every section of the country before release date. The same situation is reported in the case of "White Eagle."

The story of "White Eagle", by Val Cleveland, makes the threefold appeal of romance, mystery and intense dramatic action. In the beginning the typical Western American girl heroine of cultured breeding and education finds herself the adopted white chieftainess of an Indian tribe which possesses incredible secret riches in gold discovered by her dead father, whose dying pact with the Indians makes them guardians of her future. The tribe is of Aztec origin, and they inhabit the mysterious canyon country, where the molten golden hoard becomes the object of such plottings and counter-plottings as few heroines of fiction have had to contend with. In addition to the intrepid devotion of the hero, she has also the capable protection of a mounted figure of seemingly supernatural powers—the mysterious "White Rider." The continuity is by Bertram Millhauser and the production throughout is said to be highly efficient.

Ruth Roland's new serial to follow "White Eagle" is now being filmed in the timber regions of the Pacific. Fred Jackman is directing from a story by Val Cleveland. Bertram Millhauser did the continuity. The new Charles Hutchison chapter-picture is also under way. The story and continuity were supplied by Frank Leon Smith. George B. Seits is the director.

"The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari," the futuristic importation released by Goldwyn, has been booked in the entire Stanley circuit in Philadelphia, following a sensational two-day booking at Elliott J. Goldman's Bluebird theatre in that city.

Storey Looks for Consistent Betterment

JOHN E. STOREY, sales manager, declares that Associated Exhibitors anticipates a gradual and consistent increase of business for 1922. After reviewing the general situation from a national point of view and enumerating the underlying economic and political reasons leading up to the present improvement, Mr. Storey declares that certainly business is on the upward swing. He states that the leaders in our industrial and commercial life do not anticipate that a tremendous spurt will come all at once, but, nevertheless, they are agreed that the return of prosperity has started and will consistently increase during the year 1922.

Mr. Storey enumerated the following productions to be offered by Associated Exhibitors:

First, the spectacle film, "Lady Godiva," a Wistaria production, founded on the poem by Lord Alfred Tennyson; an Al and Ray Rockett feature, "Handle With Care," with Grace Darmond and an all-star cast; a big outdoor lumber story, "Clansmen of the North," which was recently completed under the direction of John W. Noble; a new Arthur Beck feature entitled "Don't Doubt Your Wife," in which Leah Baird is starred.

"What Do Men Want" in Great Demand

Big bookings on "What Do Men Want?" the Lois Weber production, continue to pour into the offices of Wild Gunning, Inc., through which organization the picture is being distributed.

In New York City and the East, three of the most important chains of theatres, the Keith, Proctor and Moss circuits, have booked or begun to play "What Do Men Want?"

Among the other bookings which have been reported to the home office are runs of a week apiece at three important Loew theatres outside of New York—the Baltimore theatre, the Palace theatre, in Washington, D. C., and Loew's Buffalo theatre.

R-C Attractions Suitable for Christmas

Aiming to give exhibitors the utmost service during the holiday season, R-C Pictures have arranged to offer a group of special productions that will have big appeal to theatregoers during Christmas week, according to Charles R. Rogers, general manager of distribution for R-C Pictures.

The array of Christmas subjects, the stories of which are full of the Yuletide spirit and have special interest for children, include "The Little Fraid Lady" and "Nobody's Kid" with Mae Marsh, "Seven Years Bad Luck," with Max Linder, and "One Man in a Million," with George Beban.

WID GUNNING ORGANIZATION

What It Is—What It Aims To Be— Its Service—Its Quality Pictures

WHEN F. C. (Wid) Gunning, announced last October that he had not been connected for some time with the daily which bore his name, but that he had been devoting his time to production affairs, and had taken a controlling interest in the F. B. Warren Corporation, the industry generally, and exhibitors throughout the country who knew him as one of the hardest workers on their behalf as sales executive, editor and publisher, and producer, expected big and unusual things to be forthcoming.

They have not been disappointed. The name of Wid Gunning, Inc., the new firm name, has since that time become associated with a steady stream of big specials —pictures which have assumed a place among the leading productions of the season from the point of view of high artistic standards, mass appeal, and cash-register value.

One thing all of the Gunning productions have possessed in common they have had that warm, human quality which is so easy to talk about, but so difficult to attain, and so well rewarded by the people when it is attained. "The Blot," a Lois Weber production, "Quo Vadis," a new edition of the famous Italian spectacular drama; "Good and Evil," a foreign production, starring the dazzling Lucy Doraine; "The Girl from God's Country," a stirring melodrama, written and directed by Nell Shipman, its star; "The Old Oaken Bucket," a supreme human-interest picture; "What Do Men Want?", Lois Weber's masterpiece depicting American home life, and "Our Mutual Friend," a fascinating, colorful transcription to the screen of Charles Dickens' last complete novel, followed each other in rapid succession—each production a different type of picture entertainment—each one the best of its class.

The exhibitor has come to know that a Wid Gunning picture can be depended upon one hundred per cent.—that it has been chosen by a man who through long experience in the industry and the closest of contact with actual exhibitors in the field, has come to know absolutely what will appeal to the mass of the people, and how that appeal can be exploited and brought to the attention of every man, woman and child.

On the producing end, Mr. Gunning gained an invaluable insight through active association with the late George Loane Tucker, producer of "The Miracle Man," and has acted in an advisory capacity with independent producers with whom he has had substantial interests. More recently, Mr. Gunning has had a share in Lois Weber productions, the output of the leading woman director in the industry, who has built up a tremendous following because of the human appeal of her pictures.

"Better Pictures" is Mr. Gunning's slogan.

And his organization is bringing forth just that kind.

The following pages contain descriptions and scenes from a number of productions which have already registered solidly with the public.

It was also known by many in the trade that Mr. Gunning was an important factor in the organization of Associated Producers. Taken together with his five years at the helm of Wid's Daily, which he founded, Mr. Gunning can be said to be the possessor of experience and information equal to that of any man in the industry, as far as the producer, the exhibitor and the public are concerned. Theatre owner, publicity and exploitation expert are some of the other roles he has played.

In announcing his connection with the new distributing organization which bears his name, Mr. Gunning made it clear from the start that he was working on the simple, but hitherto untried plan, of seeing that the reward of the workers in the organization and the industry generally, went to the workers, and not to swivel-chair warmers, "prospectors" or other parasites.

Mr. Gunning pointed out particularly—and the plan has been received with the greatest favor by exhibitors—that each production is sold strictly on its merit, and each production is sold separately, it being a definite policy that at no time shall various productions be grouped together and listed under the heading of the corporate name.

Another innovation of the company which has worked out to the entire satisfaction of the exhibitor is the form of contract with the producer, Wid Gunning, Inc., in no case giving to the producer advances of any character or guarantee or financial commitments of any kind.

As for product to handle, Mr. Gunning has discovered, he asserts, many times the amount he had expected to be available in the first year for such an independent organization, and is of the opinion that the pictures finally decided upon represent a standard of higher quality than any product ever held by a new company in the history of the film industry.

In selecting product for distribution, Mr. Gunning has followed only one consideration, and that was the quality of the product submitted, the only requirement being that the product be worthy of a high-powered organization. "Better pictures" has been his constant watch-word, and he believes this ideal attainable only through an efficient independent market.

"Better pictures," Mr. Gunning believes, are attainable only through rewarding the efforts of the director, the exploitation man, and the showman who create the picture, sell it to the public and see that the public comes to see it. He has followed that plan in Wid Gunning, Inc.

Most of the exhibitor's dollar spent in Gunning pictures goes to the director—the creative brains back of the picture. Then, through an elaborate form of profit-sharing evolved for the branch managers and salesmen, the entire organization is really a partnership, with the earnings of those men entirely depending upon their individual efforts, which means for the first time the absolute elimination of unearned profits, leaving the three real factors—director, salesman and exhibitor—the only factors entering into the negotiations.

The Wid Gunning organization forms a direct, efficient service contact between the producer and exhibitor, with the elimination of all parisitic elements or middlemen. Exploitation is the most important element in the sale service of the organization, and over eighty per cent. of the organization consists of exploitation men or salesmen with exploitation experience.

The warmth of the reception accorded the new organization by the exhibitors for whose benefit it was started, is the best sort of evidence that it supplied a want of long standing in the industry.

THE YEAR'S BIGGEST CLEAN-UP

WHAT DO MEN WANT?

Every film year has its big clean-up. Lois Weber's greatest production, "WHAT DO MEN WANT?", is speeding along to prove the big 1922 whirlwind, just as she gained the honor in other years with "Hypocrites", "Where Are My Children?", "Price of a Good Time", "For Husbands Only", "Jewel" and "Shoes".

All through the country the million dollar question is blazing a trail of profits. It swept Ohio off its feet. The newspapers in Cleveland, Akron, Toledo and Columbus were veritable "What Do Men Want" extras. The magical title copped more free publicity than any other picture ever shown in the Buckeye State.

And in California, Los Angeles and other cities accorded this dramatic sensation an ovation that will add a page to picture history of 1922. Everywhere exhibitors are juggling play dates, and from those who have played it comes the word, "Give us MORE like it."

Get on the band-wagon. Get in the swim. Ride along with the biggest clean-up of the year. But don't wait until "tomorrow" and be sorry—Get your name "on the line" today and be glad.

Men Want?

Scenes from the Gunning Success "What Do Men Want?"

Critics acclaim this production as one of the greatest ever made by Lois Weber

Bringing new patrons by the thousands

And the regulars never saw such a rip-snorting melodrama, such delightful humor, such a pretty love story.

But think what those new patrons mean this year of all years, when "fillums" are failing to draw and near stars are dying dismally. Think what it means to have a production that enlists the widespread newspaper interest given "OUR MUTUAL FRIEND" and that brings hundreds and thousands of new faces to moving picture theatres.

Every element needed to hold old patrons and attract new people to the screen is contained in Charles Dickens' "Our Mutual Friend"—the screen sensation that jolted blasé New York into a keener appreciation of better pictures.

Never before in the history of the film industry—has there been a picture with an appeal so broad as to satisfy the fan's hunger for melodramatic action and whet the interest of "the people who never attend the movies."

"Our Mutual Friend"

The Production—What the Critics Have Declared

The Production

"OUR MUTUAL FRIEND," the last complete novel from the pen of Charles Dickens, transferred to the screen without loss of character, atmosphere or story, has been hailed as "the perfect movie." Everyone knew that Dickens was the supreme master of warm, human stories, filled with delicious humor and satire, and was the greatest creator of whimsical, lovable characters the world has ever known.

Few people knew, until they saw "Our Mutual Fried" on the screen, that he could write a scenario of misers and haunted houses, hidden wills and mystery, quaint romance and virile melodrama. That is just what he did in "Our Mutual Friend," and that is just what has been brought out in the film version, which, wisely, followed the novel with extraordinary care and faithfulness. The effort was not to improve or change, but to preserve the spirit of the romance intact.

That this effort was entirely successful was apparent from the greeting of the hard-boiled critics. Frederic North Shorey, the critic of the Los Angeles Times, seeing the picture at a trial showing at the West Coast, said:

"Silas Wegg and his 'weal and hammers,' Noddy Boffin, the Golden Dustman and his suddenly acquired fortune, and beautiful and capricious Bella Wilfer are living again. Seldom is it possible to see a literary classic so faithfully reproduced on the screen as done in 'Our Mutual Friend.'

"The scenes are those of Dickens, the atmosphere is Dickens, the plot is that of the greatest fiction writer of the last century."

Wid Gunning, who was associated with George Loane Tucker, and also with Lois Weber, worked for months on "Our Mutual Friend" in the same manner as on the remarkably successful production, "The Miracle Man," to transfer the true atmosphere of Dickens to the motion picture screen.

The Critics' Greeting

And this was what every critic, without exception, picked out to praise in the production—that the whimsical humor, the marvelous characterization, the dramatic plot, had been brought from one medium to another, without a loss of a single one of the qualities which had made the author famous.

When "Our Mutual Friend" was shown at the Lyric theatre, New York, the New York American enthused over its "splendid characterizations." The Illustrated News went on record and called the picture "a bright and shining example of something good in the movies," while to the Times' reviewer "the characters seemed to come to life."

Harriette Underhill characterized the picture, in the Tribune, as "Dickens transferred intact to the screen," while the Evening Journal said it had "charm and interest." The Evening Post referred to its "quaint charming" and added it was "well acted throughout." The Evening Telegram summed up the whole production in the words: "an achievement seldom seen on the screen."

As for the trade-papers, their critical praise was of the highest. The Motion Picture News said:

"Whoever is responsible for 'Our Mutual Friend' deserves praise of the highest order. He has taken the salient episodes, the moving incidents and fashioned them into a highly interesting picture—a picture which reveals clearly defined characterization, some samples of quaint humor, and bits of incident—which flow along through a plot and several counterplots, releasing a fine breadth of sentiment, captivating charm, suspensive melodrama, eloquent atmosphere and what must be regarded as exceptional photography. Truly this last mentioned quality must command special attention by itself.

"It's our opinion that the picture is the best that has ever been made from a Dicken's story. So book this picture. It is fragrant with romance, unique in characterization, and quaint and colorful in costume and setting. And the photography is exquisite."

The Moving Picture World said:

"A film version of 'Our Mutual Friend' is one of the pictures that should, by right of its artistic and entertaining qualities, prove one of the big money makers of the coming year. This story of the famous English novelist turned out to be one excellent material for a moving picture and should serve as a guide to the American directors who persist in photographing life just because they are making a moving picture. It is a mystery story and has all the elements of a corking good melodrama.

"Perhaps the impersonation in the present cast that is the greatest single hit is the Bella Wilfer of Catherine Reese. Anything more charmingly feminine and lovely than this demure little English actress hasn't been shown on the screen."

"'Our Mutual Friend' contains action, drama, comedy, suspense, mystery—well, all the ingredients for what is known as good movie material today," said Wid.

You have a lot of material to work with here. You have the name of one of the world's greatest writers, and the name of one of his best known works—"Our Mutual Friend." There are thousands and hundreds of thousands of Dickens lovers all over the country, and added to this is the fact that regardless of whether or not your people know or love Dickens they have in this mighty fine picture entertainment. It's far out of the ordinary, far different. You can also talk about the beauty of Catherine Reese, and don't neglect the chance to tell your folks about the fine comedy characters of Mr. Venus and Silas Wegg. Get stills or cuts of these three and use them all over the lobby. Stills of the quaint comedians will be sure to tickle your folks and Catherine Reese is so fresh, so beautiful and so new your people can't help but "love" her.

Its New York Opening

ONE of the most notable premieres of the year was accorded "Our Mutual Friend" when it opened at the Lyric theatre in New York. In the case of the numerous Dickensonians, it was an example of "coming to scoff and remaining—to admire." As a piece of entertainment it pleased them all, and was to be declared a faithful picturization of the fiction-master's work.

The daily press of New York was no less enthusiastic.

Three scenes from "The Blot," Lois Weber's dramatic gem released by Wid Gunning, Inc.

"The Blot"

The Story—The Director—Critics' Comments—Selling the Picture

The Story

"THE BLOT," a picture in the first rank of Lois Weber's big productions, is a drama of American life with a human-interest story equal to that of "Humoresque." It is a timely, vital and human drama, and one which illustrates well Miss Weber's uncanny genius for picturing life's intimate phases as no one else on the screen does.

Miss Weber makes her players act and speak as real people would, and she gives them parts in stories which make the beholder exclaim, "That happened to me," or "That might have happened to my father." "The Blot" takes its place among her great pictures—a story of tremendous and nation-wide scope, with a heart throb in every reel. It tells an appealing story of love and loyalty, sacrifice and pride, and will arouse an overwhelming sense of shame and pity in the hearts of every man, woman and child who sees the picture.

Everyone knows that teachers, college professors and ministers are shamefully underpaid. But it was left for Miss Weber to see the human consequences of such shabby treatment dealt to what should be the highest classes of activity. She has seen it, not in the form of a sermon, but in powerful drama, scenes at once heart-rending and telling.

She takes a typical college professor, struggling on the pittance he gets, to support a wife and daughter while rich men's sons, lolling in his classroom, squander on a single debauch as much as he gets for a year's service. She shows what this desperate plight forces all three to do, and what happens when the daughter meets some of the rich young idlers. There is suspense in every scene, and a piling up of incident and detail, done as only Miss Weber can do it.

Lois Weber, Director Extraordinary

Born in Pittsburgh, Lois Weber spent her early career in concert and legitimate stage work. Her husband, Phillips Smalley, assisted her in her work on the speaking stage. Then the movies came into their own, and Miss Weber answered the call.

Through a long training, Miss Weber arrived at the producing of pictures, and some of her most famous productions include "Forbidden," "Shoes," "To Please One Woman," and "What's Worth While."

Miss Weber today is a unique figure in the motion picture world. She is the foremost woman producer and gained the distinction of being the first woman to enter the ranks of the industry. Only those few men producers who stand at the very top notch of the profession are her equals.

Miss Weber not only produces pictures. She writes her own stories, selects her own casts, directs, assembles, cuts and edits her films. Like all Lois Weber pictures "The Blot" has a heart-throb in every reel, a naturalness of acting and story which will get an instant response.

What the Critics Said

The human quality of "The Blot," the universal appeal of the production, and the excellence of the direction and acting were unanimously commented on by trade and newspaper reviewers who saw the picture.

"The Blot" is a splendid example of Miss Weber's powers of direction and her technical ability, said Matthew A. Taylor, in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS. As to the story, the reviewer thought there was "real depth to the theme," and stated that it was "skillfully handled." Miss Claire Windsor, as the daughter, was picked out as "perfect as the wistful, frail and childlike young girl." In conclusion, the review read: "The Blot" should make a perfectly satisfactory audience picture. It is very well acted and directed, and its story has an appealing theme.

Variety calls the picture "a good market bet," adding: "It should clean up a tidy sum of money. It touches the heart. It is sensibly and intelligently put together. Its technical qualities are high in standard."

"It should appeal to theatregoers and prove a good box-office bet," said Exhibitors' Herald reviewers. The story was called "up-to-the-minute in theme" and "admirably worked out by contrast and close-ups that tell a story in themselves."

Wid's unreservedly called it a play of "splendid human interest," telling "a good everyday story of life." The reviewer states "it is interestingly presented" and exposes "an existing condition which should prove interesting to a good majority."

Selling the Picture to the Public

Teasers, tie-ups and contests are all practicable to use in connection with the showing of "The Blot." The exploitation department of Wid Gunning, Inc., has prepared a series of teaser ads, which will be furnished free to exhibitors booking the picture. The teaser-campaign has proved its merit in cities where it has already been used. It will prove the same results for you.

Arrangements have also been made with the Parker Fountain Pen Company for a national publicity tie-up stunt in conjunction with the showing. One of the mediums effective in this campaign will be the distribution of a beautiful illustrated card, which will be displayed nationally by the Parker agencies from coast to coast, wherever "The Blot" is showing.

An essay contest is worked into this tie-up. On the card is the sentence "What is the greatest blot on our American life today?" Send in your answers at once to the Blank theatre, where the great American drama, 'The Blot' is now showing." If your local newspaper will take up the contest, giving prizes of money and tickets, the interest in it will be greatly increased. The newspaper tie-up has been used successfully a number of times, and is entirely possible of accomplishment.

Advertising "The Blot" in the Newspapers

THOSE who have followed the service section of The Motion Picture News during the past several months will have noted the reproduction of many fine newspaper advertisements on "The Blot" on the News' pages.

These advertisements are selected weekly by an expert from newspapers throughout the country, and may be taken as examples of the highest class motion picture advertising in the country.

It is the title, "The Blot," which affords the opportunity for newspaper advertisements which catch the eye immediately. These hand-drawn ads, all of which demand attention, are only one phase of the excellent exploitation campaign which can be, and has been, carried on in behalf of the picture.

The Blot

A Big Money Maker!

Lois Weber has produced more successful pictures than any individual in the history of the film industry. "Where Are My Children," "The Price of a Good Time," and "To Please One Woman," made "movie history" and a big pile of money for exhibitors who caught the significance of its powerful title, and realized the box-office value of Lois Weber's name.

And now comes "The Blot"—another Weber triumph that's delivering dollars to hundreds of showmen right this very minute! We call it an audience picture, for every single reel is full of the elements that bring forth the "Ahs" and "Ohs" that reflect dollars at the box-office.

It's a big picture with an appeal that will touch both heartstrings and purse-strings of all your patrons. Book it—it will draw big.

The Picture—Its Possibilities—Its Selling Points—What Critics Think

The Picture

"WHAT DO MEN WANT?" heralded as Lois Weber's greatest picture, is a virile and compellling production of American life—a spectacular drama whose human problems of everyday existence touches a responsive chord in the experience of the average man and woman. Its drama is duplicated thousands of times in thousands of homes throughout the land, but through the wizardry of Lois Weber, it assumes hundredfold appeal, and the answer which she puts forward, if it does not meet with agreement, will at least arouse a veritable storm of discussion—the surest sign that it has struck home and that it is not "just another movie."

The hunt for happiness, the big theme in this powerful melodrama, is always a factor in the life of every man, woman and child. The answer to the question of the title is one of the biggest problems of the day, and it has been presented on the screen in a big, simple way—big and impressive because of its simplicty.

In every large city the newspaper stories of divorce and separation give proof that women do not understand men, and that men do not understand themselves. Lois Weber understands both, and in "What Do Men Want?" she supplies the answer to the biggest problem in the life of every woman of today. And she supplies it in a series of soul-stirring scenes that will not be forgotten easily.

"What Do Men Want" is a big picture, with a big theme for men and women in all walks of life. Love, pleasure, children—all these enter itno the plot of the play and contribute towards the solution of the problem. It is a "picture with a powerful mass appeal," as one newspaper critic acclaimed it, and one whose characters are absolutely true to life.

Selling the Picture to the Public

The title of the production is one of tremendous pull in getting people into the theatre, and it can be used in a variety of ways to arouse interest, according to local conditions. Some of the exploitation ideas, however, are simple, inexpensive and effective enough for use almost anywhere.

There is the newspaper advertising tie-up that any live advertising manager will literally grab, for example. Suggest to the newspaper managers of your local papers to make a concerted drive on every store in town for stunt copy with the "What Do Men Want?" tie-up.

Have him group all the ads of merchants featuring the title, "What Do Men Want?" on the center spread of the paper, and you'll see a "smash" that will bring a smile a mile wide.

And what a chance for window displays! Every store in your town can work a tie-up with this million-dollar title that means business to both of you. Cigar stores, shoe stores, hat shops, clothing and haberdashers—all kinds of mens shops will jump at the chance to tie-up with the picture. And don't forget the ladies' establishments—hair dressing parlors, beauty shops, ready-to-wear stores, millinery shops, etc.

Contests are always popular, and a good essay contest, run in conjunction with your local paper, for prizes of money and tickets to the picture, should be conducted on the question, "What Do Men Want?" Have a jury of women, well-known ones if possible, act as judges of the contest.

A good teaser campaign preceding the contest would help in arousing interest, and should be used, at any rate, for several days preceding the announcement of the picture's run. First run the teaser ad in several places in each paper; then follow it the next day by addressing the question to prominent people, as "Mayor Jones, can you give the answer to What Do Men Want?" The theatre announcement should come the next day.

What the Critics Said

"What Do You Men Want?" received the highest praise when it was shown at the Lyric theatre, New York. The simplicity of its treatment, the universality of its appeal, the splendid acting—all these came in for favorable attention from newspaper and trade-paper reviewers.

Wid's daily said that it was "very simply constructed and vividly pictured; a good deal of humanness in it." Further along the reviewer said Miss Weber "makes thoroughly real people of the characters; effective small-town touches," and of the players made this comment: "Claire Windsor an appealing heroine and J. Frank Glendon a suitable hero; George Hackathorne contributes a good performance, as does Edith Kessler."

Summing it all up, the reviewer said: "In this you have a title that seems to spell 'Box Office.'"

"Here is a picture with a lesson which should make a strong appeal and prove a big box-office attraction," said the Exhibitors' Herald. "It is beautifully staged, well acted and photographed and has exceptionally strong exploitation possibilities. All in all, the picture is different from the usual, and the excellence of the story, direction and photography should make it an exceptionally popular play."

The Motion Picture News reviewer asserted that the picture was sure "to hold the interest of both sexes." Not only that, but, taking the production up in detail, the reviewer said it is "interest-compelling entertainment, skillfully directed, wonderfully staged, well acted, and without being "preachy," delivers a sermon from the screen that might do honor to any pulpit."

Joseph Mulvaney, in the New York American, commented on the "powerful mass appeal" of "What Do Men Want?" and states that Miss Weber has drawn her types "remarkably true to life." Claire Windsor is described as "altogether appealing" with a dignified beauty.

"Her picture is immensely interesting. I enjoyed every minute of it," said McElliott, in the Illustrated Daily News, while Harriette Underhill, in the Tribune, said Miss Weber's players "act just as they do in real life." The New York Times reviewer commends Miss Weber's work as having "the spark of life," and has a good word to say for the acting, the photography and the direction.

Questionnaire Used in Revival of "Quo Vadis," Which Is Released by Wid Gunning, Inc.

Good old Edison put over some live publicity when he published his famous questionnaire. The idea seems to appeal to men and women, boys and girls. So it is being used to exploit the revival of "Quo Vadis," the massive Roman spectacle that made $2,000,000 and ran for twenty-six weeks at the Astor theatre in New York. Some of the questions which may be used (with passes as the reward) are: "Who was Nero? What Empire did he rule? During what year did Rome burn? Who was Ursus? Who was Tigellinus? Who was the first person to bulldog a bull?" Questions like these get into the papers, and help to sell the picture.

"Can a Woman Make or Break a Man?"

The six teaser ads, mats or electros of which are furnished by Wid Gunning Exchanges, using catch questions printed above, are proving their value in making the till in the box office tinkle.

Chamber of Commerce Boosts "Good and Evil"

Cities, towns and hamlets have had clean-up weeks, paint-up weeks, but only lately have they been having "Good and Evil Weeks." As publicity for "Good and Evil" (Wid Gunning, Inc.), starring the beautiful European sensation, Lucy Dorraine, this week stunt is strong! The Secretary of the Chamber of Commerce has its members use these lines on store cards: "This is GOOD AND EVIL WEEK. We want your advice. Give us suggestions as to good and evil around our store."
The Secretary gets after the newspapers himself.

Ten Big Thrills in "The Girl from God's Country"

Lone fight of a girl; rescue of drowning man; death of Pierre theft by aeroplane; frightful earthquake; death by fire; race of a hundred aeroplanes; flight of the blind pilot; smashing of plane in mid-aid; fight with death in the waves—all and more in this exciting Nell Shipman (Wid Gunning, Inc.) special.

An Aeroplane Trip as Draw-Prize

In Los Angeles it was possible to offer an aeroplane trip as a lucky-number-draw prize at one showing of "The Girl from God's Country," starring Nell Shipman. Any theatre can do this, because if there isn't an aeroplane in town, there usually is one within 100 miles, or so, and the prize may be a trip in the aeroplane to be made when the winner chooses to go to claim it. It's the sort of thing that gets over, because in most communities aeroplane rides are out-of-the-ordinary enough to be something very much coveted.

Singing Ballyhoo Works for "Old Oaken Bucket"

Brings back memories of kid-day happiness, loves, aches, pains, and mother-soothings; touches the heart strings, and sends patrons home wreathed in tender smiles—quite a big job for one movie, but May Tully's "The Old Oaken Bucket" (Wid Gunning, Inc.) does it. Fred W. Falkner of Strand theatre, Newark, N. J., said so. He ran it the week of December 13. The audience applauded after every performance.
The most appropriate ballyhoo for the picture is naturally and obviously a singing ballyhoo, with "The Old Oaken Bucket" as the starred selection. Harmony quartettes of high school boys, dressed in outgrown young boys' clothes, singing on corners, walking up and down streets, a few days before, and again during the showing, make high-class advertising, get publicity, and bring in the stuff that buys bread for the baby.

"TWINKLING STAR—THE PUBLIC WONDERS WHERE YOU ARE"

By Joe F. Lee

WHERE are the screen stars of yester years? Those stars that shone brightly in the heavens of filmdom and then flopped like a falling meteor. Are they still in the land of living? If they are where are they?

It wouldn't be necessary to ask these questions had they exercised any business judgment regarding their greatest asset—popularity with the public. That was their stock in trade and had they only known it was up to themselves never to let it get shopworn by laying on the shelf too long. The answer is that they didn't blow their own horn loud enough where it would do them the most good.

One of the greatest examples of blowing a horn the right way in the proper place is herewith related, in the hope that it may strike home to some of those that have arrived and others that are now on the way up in pictures.

Not so many years ago an advertising solicitor on a theatrical publication dropped into a vaudeville theatre where small-time acts were playing. It was one of those houses where the actor does one show more than the Pathe Weekly. A young man appeared on the bill doing an act that at the time was thought crazy and ridiculous by the majority of managers. Cancellation usually followed his first or second performance in the greater number of the theatres, in fact this had been so regular an occurrence that on occasion when he was permitted to play out a full week's engagement the comdian almost went insane.

The advertising solicitor saw the act and figured that it was out of place on the small time. He paid a visit back stage to the dressing room of the actor and suggested that advertising might be the means of getting the actor an opportunity to play the bigger houses. The sales talk of the solicitor made an impression and the actor decided that he would set aside a small amount of his earnings each week for a campaign of advertising. At the beginning there was no noticeable result forthcoming but the actor kept up his campaign and then as his salary grew so did his advertising space and today he is probably the most consistent individual advertiser in vaudeville as well as being a headliner of international reputation.

His name? That isn't a secret, it is Frank Van Hoven. You've undoubtedly seen him time and again in vaudeville with his cake of ice act. He plays the big time now and has done so for a number of years now, but even though he has achieved the top of the ladder in vaudeville he does not neglect to keep on advertising, for he has made up his mind to stay at the top and he knows that advertising is one of the means to this end.

Joe Lee

The answer is that advertising is one of the certain roads to eventual success in any field, but there are very few individuals among the players in pictures that take advantage of the road.

Only recently I met a theatre owner and he remarked to me, "What has become of Miss So-and-So and that fellow Blank. I never hear or read anything about them anymore?" He was right, he did not read or hear of them even though they are still active in pictures and playing now and again in some of the big productions, but they are stars no longer. At one time they were on the top, but they have slipped simply because they failed to blow their horn in advertising while they were personages of note, and the pity of it is that they will keep on slipping until finally they will go into the discard altogether, unless they wake to the fact while there is still time to capitalize on the glory that was once theirs and advertise that they are alive.

What is the good of being a success if you keep it a secret. Many a star could increase their salary, many a director could keep working instead of waiting months between productions, and many a player of small parts might achieve bigger parts and eventually stardom if they would only advertise.

Not only are the great majority of players and directors in pictures are shortsighted in regard to advertising, but a number of producers are equally foolish at times in regard to the greatest necessity for their productions after they have been filmed.

I recall an instance where a director stepped into the office of the producer and stated that he would have to add a scene to the production that was not in the script. The producer wanted to know what the addition would cost and the director informed him that it would be in the neighborhood of $20,000. There was no debate regarding the matter, the director was instructed to "go ahead and shoot," and he did. The picture finished, there was the usual screening for the entire staff of the organization and it was noted that the $20,000 scene was cut to an eleven-foot flash, but the picture as a whole was voted a knockout by those in the projection room. The advertising director of the company was all hopped up regarding the production and that night he laid out a corking campaign to put the picture over with the exhibitors and the public. He took the campaign plan to the same executive that settled the director's $20,000 question in a few seconds, but the advertising question was not settled as quickly as that.

The executive raved and ranted, the production was so great it didn't need to be advertised, was his contention and finally the appropriation that the advertising director was cut in half and the picture, instead of being a countrywide knockout, slipped into the class of the ordinary program productions.

Too much projection room praise and lack of advertising have killed many a picture that was good, for many an executive like the one mentioned above is prone to think that because he is aware of the fact that he has a good picture that all the world will know it simply by gazing at him. But he's wrong, for the world at large is too busy looking out for itself to look at the producer and read the message in his face. The guy that coined "I'll tell the world" had the right idea, but he took in a lot of territory to do his telling in and it takes printer's ink to deliver the message properly.

Were it true that "the better the production the less need of advertising," then D. W. Griffith with "Way Down East," William Fox with "Over The Hill," and Samuel Goldwyn with "The Old Nest" must be exceedingly foolish to throw away the amount of money that they did in advertising those productions. These pictures are acknowledged as among the foremost productions of the year, but it is barely possible that the thousands of dollars that these producers spent in acquainting the trade and the public regarding the pictures through advertising is in some measure responsible for the fact that the pictures are acknowledged among the best, and incidentally for the tremendous box office returns that they polled. To add further force to the argument it would be right to note right here that those selfsame producers are continuing their advertising in behalf of these productions and thus keeping them with the acknowledged best.

It is well enough for the individual in pictures to express himself in regard to personal advertising with "That is a matter that my management takes care of

The Independent Productions of 1921

By Matthew A. Taylor

DOES "fewer and better pictures," the cry that was raised several years ago and that has been raised so often since that it will go down as one of the famous slogans of history, mean anything to the independent market? "Fewer and better"—the shout of reform that has been roared from a thousand throats until to the outsider it brought forth only a laugh of derision—is it applicable to the past year? It is probable that the number of independently distributed pictures produced in 1921 is not smaller than the number issued in the year preceding. There occurred, with the smaller producer as with the larger companies, a mid-summer depression which slowed up production considerably. But it was simply a lull and not an annihilation. Demand, and demand alone, should determine the amount of production, and the fact that independent production is, at the tail end of 1921, in full swing once more, is as encouraging a sign as the state right market could seek.

During the past year, fewer pictures with longer runs seems to be the trend of some of the program companies. To do this they have of necessity, dispensed with stars—stars whom painstaking effort and expensive publicity had raised to a point of popularity with the public. These stars, whose followers are numerous, must continue to produce. But the large producers are turning out "specials" with a wily eye to longer runs. If Mr. and Miss Star are to produce, they must do so independently, and they must market independently. And the "fewer pictures" policy of the program company, reacts for "better pictures" on the independent market.

Nineteen-twenty saw some notable state right pictures reach the screen. There was "Isobel" and there was "The County Fair," and there were such pictorial masterpieces as "When Dawn Came," besides a number of good reliable series of Westerns and a host of others. Are they excelled by the 1921 product? Is the state right market sinking back into a degraded condition — a dumping ground for pictures which can find their only market through state rights? Is the label "state right picture" to mean trash? Or are we progressing, slowly and consistently progressing to a plan which will command the respect and attention of every exhibitor?

The state right market has always been in a precarious position. Poor pictures have been made, are being made and always will be made. These pictures, if they are produced independently, cannot find a place on the program of a national distributing organization. Competition there is too keen, reputation too valuable. If they are to be distributed at all, it must be via state right. There is no third course. And so the independent market is in danger of receiving, unjustly so, an unwholesome reputation for offering nothing but the lowest sort of pictures.

Looking Backward and Peeping Ahead

"WHEN the exhibitor begins to understand that it is impossible to thrust poor pictures down the throats of the public simply because these pictures are made by a big national producer; when he appreciates the fact that the independent exchange offers him pictures of better quality, then will come the day when the independent market will dominate the industry."

When Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, president of Arrow Film Corporation, wishes to emphasize any statement, there is no mistaking his sincerity or earnestness. There was no doubt of the strength of his conviction or his faith in the independent market when he gave this New Year message to the exhibitors through a representative of the Motion Picture News. He does not plead or beg that the exhibitor keep more open dates for independent pictures. He asks it as a right. He sees no justification in the exhibitor booking unmade pictures for a year in advance and refusing to acknowledge the existence of worthy pictures in the independent exchange.

Nor does Dr. Shallenberger faint-heartedly look forward to the coming of that day. The recognition of the independent producer is not, to him, something desirable, but unattainable. Poorer business in the theatres which show the product of one company only are making recognition daily more imminent. Economic conditions are forcing the issue. The public has gone a-hunting—a-hunting for the picture that entertains, and they are refusing to accept poor pictures, even if these pictures are offered under the brand of the largest producer.

"September, the independent month," said the man who heads the powerful state right organization, and who preaches and practices independence, "helped the cause. Perhaps we did not receive the exhibitor co-operation we expected or deserved. But it was a success simply because the men in the field worked as they had never worked before. They hustled; they were filled with the enthusiasm that comes to a man when he realizes that in back of him is the strength and support of the crowd. In doing this they brought in new business. And these exhibitors became acquainted with the work of state right picture. They learned what the service and co-operation of an independent exchange means. September, 1921, did its work, and its effect will be felt in the future, for the good will that was built up, the confidence that was created or restored, will never be wasted."

Dr. Shallenberger will continue to produce pictures for the independent exchange. His activities have increased. Not one of these pictures will ever reach the screen through any other channel than the independent market. Such is his confidence, and half an hour's talk with Dr. Shallenberger convinces one that he is too good a business man, with too shrewd a business mind, to misplace his confidence.

Such a reputation must be lived down before the state right market can regain that honored position. Not all the combined press agents, writing with the fury of the possessed, can do this. But better state right pictures will help. If we can prove that high-class pictures, which have won undoubted success, have reached the independent exchangemen during 1921, we are certain that the state right has taken one step forward.

We introduce "His Nibs." Alexander Beyfuss, president of Exceptional Pictures, announced this feature several months ago. "Chic" Sale we knew. His was a name of box office value. But the skeptical had to be shown. And they were. "His Nibs" was shown at the Astor hotel in New York before all the doubting Thomases in the film industry in New York. And the verdict was unanimous. It was a picture that would make money—one of the most distinctive offerings of the year. Exploitation possibilities that are almost unlimited go with it. The sales campaign is now on and from reports the Motion Picture News is able to gather, it is "on" with a vengeance. This is not the picture for the "fly-by-night" independent exchange. The exchangeman who offers it enhances his reputation with his exhibitors. "His Nibs" inspires confidence in the independent exchange and by so doing, increases the confidence of the exhibitors in the entire state right list. And confidence is an acute need of the independent market. The picture is in reality a 1922 release, for it will be issued in January. Its progress will be watched by the trade.

Coming to another notable offering we find "Burn 'em Up Barnes," which C. C. Burr, president of Affiliated Distributors, produced with Johnny Hines in the lead. Mr. Burr decided that "Torchy" Hines was capable of bigger things than two reelers. "Burn 'em Up Barnes," a melodrama farce, with a really representative cast, was the result. We understand that the feature is now one hundred per cent sold. Its opening in Cincinnati helped the whirlwind selling campaign. It was another case of the "show me" attitude of the state right buyer in regard to independent pictures. And it helped the cause—the strengthening of the faith in the state right producer. Put down Charles Burr as the type of state right producer most needed.

That reliable "old line" company, Arrow Film Corporation, has had a notable year. If that day dawns when the exhibitor is willing to acknowledge the state right market as containing pictures which are not only desirable, but absolutely essential for their houses, it will be largely due to the zealous work and far-sighted policy of Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, president of Arrow Film Corporation. Probably no company has so consistently furnished the independent market with good pictures. During 1921 the Arrow program was widely diversified. The Ben Wilson forces on the Coast are turning out reliable features, and supplied, in the past year some Jack Hoxie westerns, and Neva Gerber features. In the serial line there was "The Blue Fox" and "Thunderbolt Jack." Arrow produced for the independent exchange. The state right market is not accepted as "the only way" in lieu of a satisfactory releasing with the national companies. Mr. Shallenberger knows his field and understands the position of the independent exchange. He is willing to help them. And during the past year Arrow Film, under his guidance, has strengthened the confidence of the industry in the state right market; has helped to stabilize conditions by a consistent flow of worth while pictures. To start the new year right, Arrow is offering "Ten Nights in a Barroom." Those in the industry who criticized with such sarcasm as "the same old sob stuff," or "rehashed and decrepit melodrama," have had a sudden awakening. For this feature has had an opening in Providence, R. I., and has been twice as successful as was expected by even the Arrow officials. It held up its record not only on the first two nights but was as popular on Friday night as on Monday. Great things are expected from "Ten Nights in a Barroom" in 1922. It gives the state right market an auspicious start in the new year.

In March came the news that the World Film Corporation planned an invasion of the state right field. Milton C. Work, president of World announced at that time, that his organization had disposed of its distributing organization and would specialize in state right features. Its features in 1921 included "Whispering Shadows," with Lucy Cotton, "The Wakefield Case" with Herbert Rawlinson, two good program features, and "Judgment," a foreign picture, rich in spectacular scenes.

Equity opened the new year with the first of its Clara Kimball Young pictures, "Hush." This star might be called one of the old stand-bys of the independent market. Her pictures find a consistent demand. No greater proof need be offered than to cite her personal appearance tours during the early part of 1921.

STATE RIGHT AND EXPORT NEWS AND VIEWS

Arista Film Offering Elaborate Picture

PRIZMA color effects will be seen in "Prejudice," the drama of Russia and Greece, which is offered on the state right market by Arista Film Corporation, of 130 West 46th street, New York City. "Prejudice" has been sloganed "A picture to think about." It is a story of Russia, and tells the tragedy of a race, persecuted and enslaved throughout the ages, deprived of justice and peace. A modern and elaborate allegorical story are combined.

A compact and useful book of campaign suggestions has been issued by Arista on this picture. It contains suggestions of lobby displays, school contests, tie-ups and teaser campaigns.

First of Margery Wilson Features Ready

Russell Clark Sales Syndicate, Inc., announces for early release Margery Wilson in "The Offenders," the first of a series of four Margery Wilson Productions—new features—independently produced to be handled by the Syndicate in the state rights field. The story by Katherine Eggleston first appeared in Munsey's Magazine, where its screen qualities attracted Miss Wilson.

Following this initial production there have been scheduled for early release in the order named, "Miss "Woman's Woman."

Author Praises Treatment of Series

Jack Levy and Harry Thomas have just hung over the desk of William Alexander, president of the Alexander Film Corporation, of which they are associate executives, a letter received ten days ago by Mr. Alexander from Sir A. Conan Doyle. The head of the Alexander firm went to London a month ago to arrange for a tour of this country, beginning next month, by Eilly Norwood, well known English player, who starred in the British "Sherlock Holmes" film features. While in London, Alexander obtained audience with the author of the famous detective stories, and showed him the American treatment of fifteen subjects that the Alexander firm will release, commencing January 1.

The author wrote that the treatment of the "Sherlock Holmes" films in sub-titles and the re-arrangement of scenes to intensify suspense astonished him with the added interest obtained.

"The Love Slave" Offered

Russell Clark Syndicate Releases Feature Starring Lucy Doraine

LAST week's list of state rights production was augmented by the release through the Russell Clark Syndicate, Inc., of "The Love Slave," produced by Sascha, from whom came "Good and Evil," and "The Prince and the Pauper." Lucy Doraine, whose exotic beauty made so strong an impression in her initial presentation in this country, heads a strong cast in a story with the East against West theme recently popularized by "The Sheik."

Made independently, thousands of miles apart, it is curious to note, states Russell Clark, that while "The Sheik" presents the East-West theme through an Arabian hero and an English heroine, in "The Love Slave" the racial differences are reversed as to sex, the hero being a white man and the dominating star part that of a beautiful Arabian slave girl. The drama is based, not on a studio-prepared story but upon a book by the famous French novelist, Georges Ohnet, whose powerful play, "The Iron Master," has become a stage classic.

As a production "The Love Slave" is said to outdo other recent pictures with an Eastern setting, inasmuch as such scenes were actually filmed in the Orient where the story opens, which it is said, gives the gratifying result of fidelity of detail which follows the use of authentic locations. The story has to deal with the clash of temperament which follows the transplanting of the Arabian slave girl to the strange environment of Western civilization, Paris, to be exact, where unconventional relations take on a far different aspect from that in Arabian desert wastes. While the theme is daring the picture is said to meet all censorship standards, the emotional scale covering the whole range of human passions with what is reported to be a surprise climax and a most satisfying, though not unadulterated, happy ending. Press matter and exhibitor aids are said to be on a par with the production, and will shortly be issued to those interested by the Russell Clark Syndicate, Inc.

Names Franchise Holders

Franklin Backer, of East Coast-Amalgamated, Returns from Trip

RETURNING from his first swing around the circle in the interests of the new East Coast-Amalgamated producing and distributing organization, Franklyn E. Backer, president of East Coast Productions, Inc., which is handling the pictures of Amalgamated Producing Company, produced under the personal supervision of Gilbert M. Anderson, made his promised announcement of franchise-holders east of the Mississippi as soon as he reached his New York office.

On his trip, Mr. Backer took three Amalgamated pictures with him so that they could be screened for the salesmen in each territory, and the most effective methods of exploitation and booking for that territory fully discussed. As the pictures are to be booked in series as well as separately, and the array of stars in the first three, including such notables as Robert Edeson, William Courtleigh, Myrtle Steadman and Tully Marshall, give an excellent idea of their quality, it was thought wise to let those responsible for their proper exploitation see at least three of them before the first, "Ashes," was released. Mr. Backer states that they were viewed with enthusiasm by the personnel of the following exchanges who hold the franchises for their respective territories; Harry Segal of Boston for New England; Warner's Exchange of New York for Greater New York and Northern Jersey; Grand-Warner Exchange of Buffalo for Northern New York; Skirboll Brother's Gold Seal Productions Company of Cleveland for Ohio and Michigan; and Samuel Spitzer's Reelcraft Film Corporation of Chicago for Northern Illinois and Indiana.

Lester M. Scott, Jr., who has until recently represented C. C. Burr, has been selected as field manager by East Coast Productions, Inc., for the territory west of the Mississippi where he will acquaint the franchise holders with the importance of the Amalgamated Productions.

Sells "The Blue Fox"

D. J. Mountain, the export manager for the Arrow Film Corporation, has just disposed of through the Interocean Film Corporation, the Arrow-Ben Wilson-Ann Little serial "The Blue Fox."

"So this Is Arizona" Ready for Release

THE first release of the W. M. Smith Productions, Inc., "So This Is Arizona," is ready for release and will be in leading State Right exchanges by January 1. "So This Is Arizona" is taken from the popular story that ran recently in the Argosy All-Story Magazine. It is the first of a series of nine pictures to be made by Smith Productions in which the stars will be Franklyn Farnum, "Shorty" Hamilton, Francis Ford, Virginia Lee and it is said to be one of the best pictures he ever made. "Arizona" is in six reels and is crammed with action from start to finish. "The White Mask," the second in the series, will be ready soon.

Chicago Distributor to Renew Activities

A decided renewal in activity is planned by Commonwealth Pictures of Chicago, immediately after the first of the year, according to President Harry A. Spanuth, who states that he is about to offer a very novel international picture to the state right buyers, a production that he believes compares favorably with the best now on the market.

This picture now is in the process of cutting and will be ready shortly for showing. Mr. Spanuth further says that it is the biggest proposition he ever participated in and that he will lay more stress in putting this feature over than he has on any of his previous campaigns.

Master Advertisers' Corporation, of Chicago, have been engaged to handle the publicity and now are preparing a very elaborate press book for exploitation of the production. Al Dezel and Jo Fischer, of the Master Advertisers, are also making plans for an effective trade showing in the near future.

Foreign Sale Reported on "Jungle Goddess"

The Export & Import Film Company, Inc., owning the world rights to "The Jungle Goddess," the fifteen episode animal-jungle serial which Colonel Wm. N. Selig is making for that company, has closed another big foreign sale on the production.

The Australasia Film Company purchased the rights for Australia, New Zealand, Phillippines, India, Ceylon, Burmah, Japan, China, Dutch East Indies, Straight Settlements and Siam. The sale was consumated immediately after the third episode of the serial arrived in New York.

Joan Film Buys New Feature

JOAN FILM SALES CO. just completed negotiations for the six-reel special Western feature production "Nine Points of the Law," starring Helen Gibson, Edward Coxen and Lee Maloney and picked cast. This feature was first titled "A Girl's Decision." It was directed by Wayne Mack from an original story by L. V. Jefferson. It will be distributed beginning immediately on the State Rights market, with some territory already sold even before the negotiations were completed.

It is said to be a pulsating western melodrama with splendid suspense, and punch throughout with a genuine "he-man" fight that compares with anything seen on the screen in a long time. Of this picture when reviewed under the title, "A Girl's Decision," the MOVING PICTURE WORLD said: "Well acted, well directed, tells story in a manner that grips interest; several slight inconsistencies are easily overlooked by the general excellence of the production."

Of it THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS said: "Good State Rights bet—a money maker—type of picture which is ever in demand—story cleverly worked out—the suspense is admirable." The Exhibitors' Herald described this picture as "Picture with plenty of action—picture that will excite children to shouts and cheers—good states right picture." The Exhibitors' Trade Review said: "Acting throughout is praiseworthy—Helen Gibson makes heroine that one cannot help but admire—difficult role portrayed with realistic vividness—action is rapid—fistic combat between McLeod and Cullum a humdinger. The story is that type which never fails to delight every class of patron. It is a story of a mysterious girl, a brave, square dealing, square shooting man of honor, but to whom fate has dealt a bitter blow; another man also brave but unscrupulous, and two little children whose tiny hands guide the woman through the depths to happiness."

As one exhibitor stated who was present when a private showing was bring given: "This type of picture will live as long as the movies exist and still be popular with all classes, first because it is clean, fine, and gets right down to first principles of playing square with your fellowmen. There is no ranting nor outbursts of uncalled-for melodrama—it is done in a way that gets under the skin of the average person, and after all if a picture can do that, it has every element of success. It held my interest from the opening panel to the last fade out, and when a picture can grip you for six full reels it's got to have something in it and this one has."

The deal for Rainbow was handled by Fred T. Robert, who assisted in the supervision of the production in the process of filming.

Exhibitors who have solicited on the value of the title have stated that the title "Nine Points of the Law" fits the action and drama in this film to perfection while its box office possibilities are magnificent.

Elaborate advertising campaign books are now being prepared to back up this picture, also a wide variety of exploitation and advertising accessories by the Joan Film Sales Co., Inc.

"Nine Points of the Law," Western Special, Is Offered

Independent Productions

She was received everywhere with a welcome that could be envied by the highest public officials and was given publicity rarely equalled by any star. "Hush" was followed by others of the Clara Kimball Young series, "Charge It," and "Straight from Paris." Equity also offered in May, "The Black Panther's Cub," a Ziegfeld feature, starring Florence Reed. This last may be counted as another of the notable state right pictures of the year.

Another company to contribute worth-while features to the independent market during 1921 was Warner Brothers. "Why Girls Leave Home" is practicaly the only one of their bigger features which may be classed as a 1921 release. The Motion Picture News' reports from first run houses tell its story. These reports are unbiased. They tell the unvarnished truth. And these reports have all been—"exceptional picture. Strong box office attraction." Keen showmanship gave a title certain to attract a particular class, to a strong dramatic story equally certain to send another class home happy. Warner's "School Days," with Wesley Barry, which had its review early in December of this year, promises to be a picture that will bring credit not only to the independent market as an attraction able to compete with any feature made, but it will also serve as an argument for the screen as the medium for clean, and instructive entertainment. No reformer, be he rabid and wild-eyed, can raise even the faintest outcry against this production.

Space does not permit us to review all the state right productions of the past year, classify them, and tell their effect on the state right market, for better or for worse. Ivan Abramson made "The Mother Eternal" and afforded it a Broadway run. Aywon Film Corporation, headed by Nathan Hirsh, have made "Big Boy" Williams popular and offered some high class thrillers in the "Snowy" Baker series. Brandt-Davis came forth with a Northwest feature of the highest class. It was "The Heart of the North," starring Roy Stewart and Louise Lovely, and it found a ready market and a popular reception. "The Supreme Passion," released by Robt. W. Priest, of The Film Market, was welcomed as a clean, interesting feature. Russell Productions are responsible for a number of worth while features.

In addition there were "Honeymoon Ranch" and "West of the Rio Grande," fast-moving Westerns offered by Bert Lubin, "The Parish Priest," released by Herman Garfield, "Black Sheep," offered by Pinnacle Productions, and other reliable program features from smaller companies which contributed one of two features to the independent market during the year.

Producers Security released "Diane of Star Hollow," "The Soul of Man," "Squire Phin," and "The Right Way," the Thomas Mott Osborne picture. Malcolm Strauss re-entered the production field and offered "The Twice-Born Woman," an artistic production which enjoyed a run at the New York Hippodrome.

The above are only mentioned in the hope that they will aid in proving that 1921 has certainly seen no retrogression in the quality of the state right picture. There were one or two occasional flashes to reach the screen during the twelve month, while the bulk of the offerings (and the state right field must be judged by these) were consistently good. The remainder, the very small minority, were the features of poorer quality which will always glut the independent market, but which should never be taken as the standard.

The coming year and its productions are still shrouded in mystery. We know the quality of only a few, such as "School Days" and "Ten Nights in a Barroom." But it seems probable that the standards of 1922 will certainly not be below, and possibly very much above, those of 1921. The exchanges demand only the higher class pictures.

And the attitude of the leaders of the independent field is, at the beginning of the new year, a remarkably sane and reasonable one. They are not shouting optimism with their mouths wide open and their eyes shut to actual conditions. Neither are they in a blue funk tieing crepe about their arms and strings about their pocketbooks. They see the need of co-operation, they are beginning to understand each other's difficulties. They are settling down to work out their business problems in a business-like method.

Enthusiastic Reports Continue on "His Nibs"

Favorable and enthusiastic reports from purchasers of territorial rights to Charles ("Chic") Sale in "His Nibs" continue to flow uninterruptedly into the offices of L. L. Hiller, president of "His Nibs" Syndicate, Inc., who is handling the sale of this picture on the state rights market, and are being received regularly at the headquarters of Exceptional Pictures Corporation, producers of the picture, it is announced.

Not only are the buyers themselves and their organizations highly pleased and enthusiastic over the acquisition of the rights to "His Nibs," but also the reception accorded the production at the various pre-views arranged by the purchasers have been gratifying and decidedly fruitful. The independent exchanges are finding it an easy matter to interest first runs in their respective territory, and it appears certain that by January 1st, when "His Nibs" is scheduled to be released generally throughout the country, first runs will be definitely arranged for in every exchange and key city in the United States.

Charles McGovern Will Tour Country

Charles F. McGovern of McGovern & Egler, who are distributing the new series of Shorty Hamilton two-reel Westerns, left New York this week for an extensive tour throughout the country.

Mr. McGovern expects to visit all the independent exchanges, and will stop to look over things at the W. M. Smith Studios in Tulsa, Oklahoma, where the new series is being produced under the direction of W. A. S. Douglas.

International Success for Warner Feature

Reports continue to pour in concerning the record breaking career of the Warner production "Why Girls Leave Home," from every section of the United States and now the remarkable success of the picture promises to become an international affair.

"Why Girls Leave Home" is about to let our Canadian brothers across the line in on the question that has aroused unprecedented interest wherever the picture was shown in this country and the big Allen theatres in all the Canadian cities are preparing to go the limit on an exploitation campaign that will set some new box-office records for the Provinces.

In England, Pearl Films, Ltd., have fired the first shot in their campaign with advertising that reads, "'The Kid' is the record breaker for 1921 and 'Why Girls Leave Home' will maintain the records for 1922."

Hoxie Completes Work on Arrow Picture

Jack Hoxie last week completed his work on the Ben Wilson Production, "Under Orders," and started preparations for his next picture, title of which has not yet been selected. Hoxie is directed by Roy Clements.

"Chic" Sale Starting on Long Vaudeville Tour

CHARLES (CHIC) SALE, the Exceptional Pictures star, who has been playing vaudeville engagements about New York for the past few weeks, will spend Christmas week headlining at the Colonial theatre, and will then start for a tour of the Middle West, playing Pittsburgh the week of January 2. This tour will last until early spring, when Mr. Sale's second motion picture will probably be photographed.

There has been no decision as to Chic Sale's second picture, but the success of his first picture, "His Nibs," has been so great that it is very possible his second will also have a small-town setting. At any rate, it will again give Mr. "Chic" Sale the opportunity of displaying his protean art, which has made Mr. Sale a great vaudeville and musical comedy favorite, and which allowed him to transfer seven of his rural characters to the screen in "His Nibs."

Numerous Inquiries Anent "Pasteboard Crown"

While it was expected that the screen play "The Pasteboard Crown," adapted from Clara Morris' heralded novel by Thomas F. Fallon, would occasion a great deal of interest, yet Messrs. Nathan & Semerad were not prepared for the onslaught of inquiries received concerning the distribution of their production, directed by Traverse Vale. It was only possible to screen "The Pasteboard Crown" through courtesy of the well known director, who purchased the rights many years ago, and held on until it was possible to give the book the production he was convinced it deserved.

The past week was a busy one, indeed, for the executive staff of the organization, everybody on the alert. The distribution was practically settled and about to be announced, when an unanticipated request by wire to hold negotiations pending the arrival of a prominent film factor, en route to New York. Therefore, it is not yet possible to definitely state what disposition will be made, nor can it be stated when interested parties may hope to see it.

Beautiful Scenic Shots in "Tangled Trails"

Jacob Badarraco, camera man for Neal Hart of the William Steiner Productions, secured some very fine photography for "Tangled Trails" under most trying circumstances. The company struck a blizzard in the Northwest, which kept up for many days, then came leaden skies, and strange to relate some of the very best photography was taken under this condition. The reflected light from the snow was the means of getting the most perfect results.

Exceptional's Progress

Exceptional Pictures Accomplished Big Things in a Short Time

ALMOST unusual record of achievement is that put forth by the Exceptional Pictures Corporation, of which Alexander Beyfuss is the president, and A. S. Kirkpatrick, vice-president and general manager. This is one of the newer production units, an organization of progressive young men who stand for the new art of the motion picture, pictures that are carefully conceived, which entertain and enlighten.

One of the first duties of Exceptional Pictures Corporation, which started business on September 1, 1921, and is, accordingly, four months old, was to take over the remarkable film photographed in the wilds of British North Borneo by Martin Johnson, and exploiting this film under the title of "Jungle Adventures," demonstrate by a showing at the Capitol theatre that the public at large was greatly concerned with the daily life of men and beasts at the far ends of the earth. In this pre-release at the largest and most important theatre in the country, the New York City newspapers were lavish in their praise of the picture, and the house was crowded through the run. Photoplay, one of the representative "fan" magazines, classed "Jungle Adventures," as one of the six best pictures of the month, while "Life," a severe critic of the motion picture industry, said it was a picture for all the family.

Incidentally, Martin Johnson's "Jungle Adventures" was the first film to be licensed by the New York State Board of Censorship, being praised by that body as a perfect picture.

The second great achievement was when "His Nibs," with Charles (Chic) Sale as the star, was exhibited at a private showing at the Hotel Astor Ballroom, and proved to be one of the greatest comedy characterizations of the year.

Immediately after the picture was shown Exceptional Pictures Corporation received a flood of offers to distribute the picture, but it was thought best to accept the offer from Mr. L. L. Hiller, who desired to buy the picture and form a special company for its distribution. This company is known as "His Nibs" Syndicate, Inc., and in less than thirty days contracts were closed for more than 30% of the entire country, so great was the interest shown by the trade. In summing up the motion picture progress of the year, Marion Russell, in "The Billboard," places "Chic" Sale, in "His Nibs," in the class of picture that unhesitatingly reaches the American public. Miss Russell calls them "pictures of the quiet, heart-interest type," and mentions as in this class, "The Old Nest," "Over the Hill," "Disraeli," "Little Lord Fauntleroy" and "His Nibs," as well as "Humoresque."

In addition to this, Exceptional Pictures Corporation has signed contracts with Otis Skinner to appear in a film version of Booth Tarkington's play, "Mister Antonio," which Mr. Skinner played on the stage for three successive seasons. The picture is to be made as soon as Mr. Skinner completes his present tour in "Blood and Sand."

Contracts have also been signed for another picture starring Charles (Chic) Sale.

Martin Johnson is at present in British East Africa, making another motion picture of life in the tropical wilderness, and the forthcoming events are made additionally interesting by the fact that Exceptional Pictures Corporation has purchased the screen rights to "Grumpy," the comedy-drama success in which Cyril Maude, the famous English actor, played in this country.

New Series Is Announced

Lee and Bradford Offer Three Josephine Earle Productions

IN addition to handling two super productions, the office of Messrs. Lee & Bradford announces that they now have ready for distribution on the state right market a series of three Josephine Earle productions entitled "Branded"; "Serving Two Masters" and "Way of a Man."

These pictures are society dramas of the highest standard, well cast and photographed, it is said. It is to be remembered that Miss Josephine Earle was formerly a Vitagraph star. Having completed the above series, she has gone back to the legitimate stage and is now appearing in musical comedy.

These pictures were made at a cost of approximately $40,000 each, it is announced, but due to the fact that the producers were in need of cash, Messrs. Lee & Bradford were able to make a remarkable purchase and intend passing them on to the independent exchanges.

This series has just been completed, and the following territories have already been disposed of; Greater New York and Northern New Jersey to the Capital Film Exchange; New York state the Webster Pictures Company; New England States to the Pioneer Film Corporation of New England; Eastern Pennsylvania to the Screen Art Pictures; Western Pennsylvania and Western Virginia to the S. & S. Film Exchange; States of Ohio and Kentucky to the W. A. Kaiser Enterprises; State of Michigan to the Minter United Amusements; the Northwestern territory to the Inter-State Film Exchange; Louisiana and Mississippi to the S. T. Stephens Film Distributing Company. Additional sales will be announced in the near future.

Storey Pictures Offers Comedy Series

"HAM OMELET," the first of a series of Burlesque Photoplays featuring Elsie Davenport, is announced for the State Rights market by Storey Pictures, Inc.

"No Darn Yeast," "Little Lord Fond o' Joy," "'Salami' Peter's Pants" and "Let Her Rip Van Winkle" are others of the series of twelve two-reelers, released one a month.

Miss Davenport is supported by Edward Anthony, Jack Costello, Jack Walters, Matt Welcome, Estelle Harris, Ruth Young, Gladys Davis, Genevieve Cassidy, Billie Davis and John Hendricks.

"Shadowland Screen Review," the single reel, every two weeks of Stars and Stage, Dance and Arts at Home, at Work and at Play, is also offered in a series of twenty-six on the State Rights market, by Storey Pictures, Inc.

A series of two-reel dramas, one a month, will shortly be offered the independent market by this same company.

Affiliated Studio Sets Speed Record

Affiliated Distributors, Inc., broke some speed records recently. In the two-reel comedy "Torchy's Luck," with Johnny Hines in the title role, the picture had to be finished on Friday at the latest. It was Thursday night when the filming was completed. Between that time and the next morning the picture was edited, cut and titled and ready to be delivered on time. While it took all night to do the work, everybody pitched in and helped to the limit.

Russell Clark Syndicate Shortens Name

In the independent field Russell Clark announces the dropping of the word "Sales" from the corporate name of his firm which will hereafter be known as "Russell Clark Syndicate, Inc." A broadening of the scope of the activities of the organization is responsible for the change, and detailed announcement of these will shortly be made public.

Press Hails Skinner's Return to Screen

The announcement from the office of Exceptional Pictures Corporation that Otis Skinner was to appear again before the motion picture camera, under the supervision of this company, brought forth a shower of comment from the exhibitors and the newspapers. Mr. Skinner's first picture proved that this favorite star of the speaking stage was also a great pantomimist, and that his art of subtle characterization was heightened by his work before the camera.

A majority of the motion picture editors of the largest papers in the country have made considerable comment regarding the signing of a contract between Mr. Skinner and the Exceptional Pictures Corporation, calling to attention Mr. Skinner's work in "Kismet" and comparing it with his work for the stage. "Mister Antonio," the Booth Tarkington play which will serve as Mr. Skinner's second motion picture story, was used by Mr. Skinner for three successive seasons, and is nationally popular, adding that much more interest to the forthcoming production, which will be started as soon as Mr. Skinner finishes his tour in "Blood and Sand."

Special Stunts Devised for Selig Serial

With the first four episodes of "The Jungle Goddess" already in New York and the fifth and sixth practically completed, work on this new animal-jungle serial which Col. Wm. N. Selig is making for the Export & Import Film Company, Inc., is now practically caught up to schedule, it is said.

Colonel Selig is taking extra precautions to pack the serial with as many "stunts" scenes as is possible and at the same time keep the story realistic and logical. To this end, according to a statement from the Export & Import Film Company he has engaged a staff of three technical experts who are concentrating on devising original "thrillers" for "The Jungle Goddess."

Competition Is Industry's Need

HARRY M. WARNER, of Warner Brothers, is firm in the belief that the greatest need of the motion picture industry is keen competition among the picture theatre owners.

"The very life of the industry is competition, because only through competition can the art of the motion picture reach its highest pinnacle. Without competition the industry would become stagnant.

"Now while the producer—the conscientious producer—whose aim is to bring forth only the best productions for the entertainment of the masses fulfills to the best of his ability every requirement to materialize his cherished ideals he finds the theatre owner a stumbling block to his progress. Let me stress right here the fact that there are exhibitors throughout this country who control many of the small and big towns. Their attitude is that of the magnate who has cornered let us say the wheat market.

"And in having this control, this monopoly of showing whatever they think fit for their respective communities, they jeopardize the producer. For the producer cannot get his product into that town unless he comes down and meets the order of the exhibitor. In other words, the producer is up against a tough proposition in order to realize a fair profit on his product.

"If the exhibitor controlling a town sees fit to ignore the producer's product it takes no stretch of the imagination to see that he (the producer) can never hope to get very much for his brain child. And if he can't get a requisite amount of money out of a good box office production, then he can't ever hope to produce money-making pictures. In the final analysis it simply means that the market will be cluttered with inferior productions.

"A glaring example of this fact was recently made by several prominent showmen after one of our pictures was unanimously praised by both the trade press and newspaper critics as being one of the finest pictures ever produced, suitable for all classes of people in every town and hamlet throughout the world. But they can't kid us into the belief it is not a winner. They can't refute the statements of others in the hope of getting the picture for a song. They've got to stand on both feet and play the game like men—play it so that both the producer and the showman can carry on in their respective enterprises.

"The sum and substance of the entire matter is this: If there is more than one theatre in a town—that is to say, if they compete with each other for the best product available—then and only then will this industry progress to its natural growth, because the producer can feel assured that his productions will receive their due reward."

Torino Films Enters Field

Harry Raver Heads New Company; Will Make One Feature a Year

COMMITTED to a policy of not more than one production each year, Torino Films, Inc., has been chartered by the State of New York, with an authorized capital of one million dollars. The officers of the new company are: Harry Raver, president; Bert Wheeler, vice president; John Dudley, secretary and treasurer. Associated with these men on the board of directors are Robert H. Davis, editor-in-chief, of the Frank A. Munsey fiction magazines, Larry Giffen, author's and publisher's representative, Fred McClelland, well known showman and Dr. Charles Perilli, a noted physician and surgeon.

The plans of Torino Films include the production of not more than one picture annually and the exploitation of such additional productions as the company may decide to purchase in its own right, or distribute as agent for other producers. The activities of the company, in any case, will be confined to films of the super class.

A literary committee, consisting of Larry Giffen, Robert H. Davis and Harry Raver will select the company's story material.

Fred McClelland will be in charge of exploitation, with a corps of assistants. Bert Wheeler, will head the sales department.

The business affairs will be in charge of John L. Dudley, member of the N. Y. Chamber of Commerce and formerly trustee of the City Savings Bank.

Absorbing the business of Harry Raver, Inc., Torino Films takes d'Annunzio's "Cabiria" and all the additional films contracts of the former company. "Cabiria" is being offered to the picture theatres for the first time, following its big-theatre run, by Associated First National Pictures. The films has been revised to run an hour and three-quarters, as against the three hour running time of its original presentation.

Franklin Backer Closes for Foreign Rights

Through a contract negotiated by Franklyn E. Backer of East Coast Productions, Inc., the entire foreign rights to the series of twelve Amalgamated Production presenting Broadway favorites under special co-starring agreements have been acquired by the Export and Import Company of New York. These pictures are to be delivered at the rate of one each month. Other contracts with exchanges in the United States who will handle the Amalgamated product as franchise holders are now being consummated and the announcement of the principals promised at an early date.

Chas. not Elmer McGovern, in New Company

Charles F. McGovern, of McGovern and Egler, who are distributing the new Shorty Hamilton Series on the State Right Market, wishes to correct an impression that is prevalent throughout the trade, that Elmer J. McGovern is the "Mac" who is connected with the above mentioned combination.

"Charles F." is a brother of "Elmer J." and has been connected with him for the past two years as an assistant editor and also special sales representative for "The Woman Untamed" which "Elmer J." controls.

New York Critics Laud "School Days"

GUS EDWARDS' "School Days," featuring Wesley Barry, distributed by Warner Brothers, has received the unstinted praise of both the trade paper and newspaper critics, following the preview presentation in Chicago and at the Astor Hotel, New York. The laudatory comments fired at Harry Rapf, the producer, and William Nigh, the director, are unanimous in the opinion that "School Days" is a production that will sweep the country in popularity.

Giving Quality and Fair Play

Two Essentials for Success in 1922, Says Russell

ACCORDING to W. D. Russell, president of the Russell Productions, Inc., of Chicago, just two things are necessary for the independent producer's success during 1922. These are the quality of his production and the fairness of his selling price. With these there is no danger of failure.

"We are in the independent producing field," states Mr. Russell, "and have completed our first big feature, 'Shadows of Conscience.' Immediately on its presentation in the market, it was bought by several of the largest state rights exchanges in the country. 'Shadows of Conscience' is the first of a series of worth-while productions to be released as Russell Productions. We have our own studio in California which is under the personal direction of Bernard D. Russell, a stockholder of the corporation and an expert in getting the biggest results at the lowest outlay. The next picture will deal with the much exploited social problem in a big way and from an entirely new angle. An all star cast will be used.

"This corporation believes absolutely in the future of its operations in the independent market and feels that this field is particularly fitted to make films go over for all they are worth by reason of the fact that they are not tied up with series of weekly releases. In consequence, they can give proper and persistent attention to special feature attractions. They are in a position to intensify sale or booking campaigns in a more positive manner than is possible through the channels of national distributing organizations.

"With all these facts in hand, Russell's Production, Inc., believes that the prospect for its outlet in 1922 is the open market. Through our experience as individuals, members of the corporation have been able to combine valuable knowledged in the field of purchasing talent, for making pictures. This is a matter of natural mutual interest to buyers because it predicates a guide to sales prices. The waste experienced by the producers on the Coast in this one vital portion of their business during the year 1921, is astounding.

"Buying professional talent may be likened to purchasing literary matter. Estimated values mean nothing in this regard as they are apparently intangible. Here is where the experienced editor or producer gets results. He knows what he wants and where to get it at a fair price, just as an experienced buyer in one department store, can put goods on his shelves at a much lower price than his competitor who lacks experience. Of course, in consideration of questions of economy, we never allow expense to interfere with the artistic quality of our productions.

"The outlook for 1922 is not very encouraging from the viewpoint of conditions at the close of 1921. If nobody moves, however, things must remain stationary. Progress means movement. Business men in every line must show vision and urge things along. The moving picture business more than any other is dependent upon good times. There is plenty of money in the banks. Let's help to cause it to flow in industries of all kinds. With team work I am satisfied this will be a more prosperous year for the industry as a whole.

"The public is realizing the fact that 'The Play's the Thing' more and more every day—a star is losing his or her ascendancy. In consequence, there has been a gradual reduction of salaries of stars which means a much lower cost of production. The ultimate ends will be lower prices for bookings, lower costs of admission, and in the final analysis more extensive patronage for the individual exhibitors and more diversified satisfaction throughout the trade."

Bernard D. Russell, of Russell Productions, Inc., of Chicago

Bible Pictures in Final Cutting Stage

Adolph Weiss, of Artclass Pictures Corporation, at present supervising the cutting and editing of the Italian production of the Old Testament controlled by this organization, reported this week that the final stages of this work were now being entered upon. It is understood that the tremendous quantity of film exposed to produce this film has now been brought down to about fifteen thousand feet. The final cutting will whip this footage to the confines of a ten-reel feature. Many scenes of spectacular value and scenic beauty have been sacrificed for the purpose of reducing the Bible offering to the length required for theatre entertainment.

When the work of editing and titling has been completed a conference will be held between Weiss and his associates and a corps of laboratory experts for the purpose of laying out the color continuity which forms an important part of the film.

Arrow Special Proves Sensation

"Ten Nights in a Barroom" Opens with Huge Success

RECORD after record continues to be made by Arrow's sensation "Ten Nights in a Barroom," which, it will be remembered is a Blazed Trail Production, starring John Lowell and Baby Ivy Ward. It was written for the screen by L. Case Russell, who took as the ground work of the story the stage version attributed to W. W. Pratt on the novel by T. S. Arthur.

The sixty-year record of "Ten Nights in a Barroom" as the theme of great popular appeal culminated at Providence, R. I., last week, where it was presented at the B. F. Keith's Victory Theatre, by the Arrow Film Corporation, under the supervisory exploitation of J. Charles Davis, 2d.

During the week the picture broke all records of the Keith House in Providence, as a show town, financially and numerically. Never before had so many people been attracted to a Providence theatre; never before in a single week had so much money been paid into a Providence theatre. Then again, not only all the motion picture records for this town were broken but also all precedents of the Victory Theatre, which insisted upon a second week's booking for the picture.

"What Providence does today the rest of America will do tomorrow," states Arrow, "Providence is a tough town to break into, as it is purely industrial and hard working, and at these times money is not too plentiful there. While 'Ten Nights in a Barroom was attracting its scores of thousands, setting the town aflame, drawing record money, other national attractions were starving to death. These are cold facts.

"What is the cause of all this? In the first place, you have a sixty-year-old theme in 'Ten Nights' of world-wide appeal. Almost every man, woman and child on the North American Continent, not to say all other parts of the world, has heard of 'Ten Nights in a Barroom.' In the language of the show business it will pack them in where other themes will fail even to cause an elevation of the public eyebrow. Then you have the intensive exploitation methods put out by a master of the game, with the magnificent co-operation of the authorities of the city, public characters, personal appearances of the great star, John Lowell, and the heart interest human story.

"Day after day the interest of the offering increased, the theatre was crammed, side walks were crowded, the police were called out simply because when all is said and done, when all the exploitation methods had been exhausted, and all the personal co-operation available for 'Ten Nights' as a great human heart interest story, magnificently directed and produced and well acted by John Lowell, Baby Ivy Ward and a splendid cast, the story goes straight to the heart of the people."

"Ten Nights" is a triumph for the Independent cause in motion-picture production and exploitation. It is a smack in the eye to monopoly and the program.

Tiffany's Plans for 1922

Production Policy to Remain Unchanged with Increased Activities

THE following statement has been received from M. N. Hoffman, president of Tiffany Productions, in which he explains the present and future policy of that company:

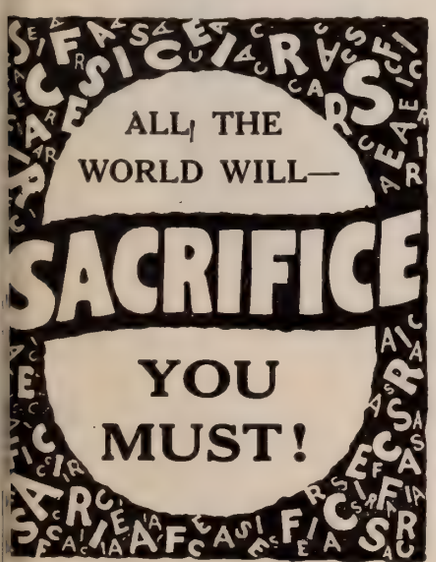
"The basis upon which Tiffany Productions, Inc., formulated its producing plans was the result of a careful survey of the field as it appeared almost a year ago. In spite of the pessimistic view held at that time and maintained since by many of the leaders of the industry, upon the subject of independent production, the directing heads of the Tiffany organization were convinced that quality and merit was an investment which would justify itself from the standpoint of dollars and cents.

"The production of 'Peacock Alley' was started. Money was lavishly but wisely spent, and we had the satisfaction of seeing our contention overwhelmingly justified in the generous and unstinted acclaim with which 'Peacock Alley' was received upon its first presentation.

"Our second production, with Mae Murray as the star, will be known as 'Fascination,' and our company is now in Havana, Cuba, busily engaged in taking the first scenes. The same lavishness in production and cast which marks 'Peacock Alley' as a remarkable production will be equalled if not excelled in our new picture.

"Following Robert Z. Leonard's usual custom, six weeks of intensive preparation was expended upon 'Fascination,' and every point of the new production has been worked out down to the last detail so that every penny put into it would bear fruit in the finished production.

As time goes on it is the intention of our company to bring into being one or two more production units with stars of the calibre of Miss Murray, in productions having all the 'ear marks' of Tiffany excellence."



Educating the Exhibitor in the Motion Picture Art

"ONE of the most vital problems of the motion picture industry today is the education of the exhibitor."

That is the contention of William S. Nigh, author and director of "Why Girls Leave Home," "School Days," and other film successes. Mr. Nigh's contention is founded on a personal observation of picture conditions since the earliest days of the motion picture, and he has discovered that before the screen play can reach its highest estate the exhibitor has got to be educated to a point of appreciation of the artistic value of a given production.

"By the education of the exhibitor is meant that he must be big enough to realize the true worth of a production as entertainment for his patrons," continued Mr. Nigh. "I do not mean to imply that the commercial side of the exhibitor's enterprise should be ignored. To the contrary, that factor must be taken into consideration, but we must not get away from the fact that in order to bring the art of the motion picture to a higher estate we must be able to discern good screen values.

"If we ignore the screen play as an art and merely take it purely from a commercial standpoint, then this industry will peter into oblivion. For no creative work can long survive if its primary purpose is monetary reward.

Sound Commercial Basis Our Great Need

"SOUND commercial basis" should be the catchword of the motion picture industry, according to Nathan Hirsh, president of Aywon Film Corporation, and Photocraft Pictures. "It is no longer possible to tolerate 'wild-cat' methods, such as are the curse of the oil fields today," states Mr. Hirsh. "Just as soon as the industry is established upon strictly business lines, minor considerations will automatically adjust themselves.

"During the past year producers, distributors and exhibitors have made a brave fight against adversity and it is still necessary to show a united front. The coming year will be an endurance test in which only the fit will survive, and there must be closer co-operation between distributors and producers."

Pyramid Formed in 1921

Walter Greene Heads Growing Company; New Picture Under Way

HEADED by executives who have made an enviable reputation for themselves, Pyramid Pictures, Inc. was organized during the current year. At the time of its organization, Walter E. Greene, who was one of the organizers of Famous Players-Lasky, and who at present is president of Pyramid Pictures, Inc., openly declared that Pyramid's inception in the motion picture field would be a guarantee for a bigger and better product. That Pyramid has kept its promise with the field is best proven by the class and calibre of its first production "My Old Kentucky Home," which was personally produced for Pyramid by that master director, Ray C. Smallwood, from an original story from the pen of Anthony Paul Kelly.

"My Old Kentucky Home" is almost complete. At the present time, Mr. Smallwood, his technical staff and his all-star players are in New Orleans (La.) completing exteriors for this super-feature. Monte Blue, Sigrid Holmquist, Lucy Fox, Julia Swayne Gordon, Frank Currier, Matthew Bets, Arthur Carew, Billy Quirk, Pat Hardigan and Francis Grant are the players making up Pyramid's all-star cast. The feature will be ready by February 1st.

Now that "My Old Kentucky Home" is almost complete, Pyramid executives are working day and night preparing for the second story. Paul M. Potter's big Broadway success "The Queen of the Moulin Rouge" has been purchased by Mr. Greene for Pyramid's second all-star vehicle. Monte Blue yesterday affixed his signature to a Pyramid contract assuring this recently-formed corporation of a star who is in popular demand by every motion picture producer. A cast in keeping with Mr. Blue will be engaged.

Second National Releases

"David and Jonathan" to Be First Release; Other Specials to Follow

ANNOUNCEMENT is made by Second National Pictures Corporation, of plans for the early release of several new pictures. The first of the series, now ready to go to the exhibitors is "David and Jonathan," a picturization of the popular novel by E. Temple Thurston, featuring Madge Titheradge. It is a story of a friendship between two young men under difficult circumstances, and continuing after the pair are cast away on a desolate island with a young woman with whom both are in love.

Coincidental with the release of "David and Jonathan," the publishers of the book have arranged to bring out a fourth edition, in anticipation of a stimulated demand for Mr. Thurston's work as a result of the presentation of the screen version throughout the country. It is stated that the author's narrative has been followed closely in preparing the film version.

Other productions scheduled for early release by Second National Pictures Corporations are: "The Edge O' Beyond," by Gertrude Page; "The Night Riders," by Zane Gray, and "Mr. Pim Passes By," by A. A. Milne. Other notable pictures based on stories which have won fame as serials and in book form are in preparation.

Elaborate Posters for Brandt-Davis Feature

"Paper" and advertising accessories are completed on "Life's Greatest Question," the new George H. Davis-Joe Brandt special feature—and are announced as more elaborate and complete than those which accompanied the first feature, "The Heart of the North."

The accessories were prepared under the personal supervision of Mr. Brandt, who passed finally on every detail of the campaign before leaving on the special tour of the key cities where he is seeing important State Rights buyers who have asked for the chance to see this feature first.

Some Professional Achievements in 1921

Throughout the year, when occasion demands any kind of essay upon accomplishments of a number of participants in varied fields of endeavor, each is usually presented alphabetically, in his turn. Fortunate is the one whose name begins with "A."

This being the season of good cheer, the time when standard methods are apt to be temporarily discarded, let us begin with nearest the end of the alphabet, giving those who usually bring up the rear, an opportunity to lead the procession:

Robert G. Vignola has closed his year's activities in a blaze of glory in presenting the artistic Cosmopolitan production "Enchantment," starring Marion Davies. His artistry was further proven in his delicate handling of "The Woman God Changed," and again, on its predecessor, "Straight is the Way," a delightful rural comedy drama. For 1922—well, watch him.

A half dozen productions come to mind as the achievements of Anita Stewart during the fading year. It will be difficult indeed for her to exceed in the future the dramatic delineations presented in "Her Mad Bargain," "Playthings of Destiny" and "The Invisible Fear." Nor can "Harriet and the Piper," "Sowing the Wind," "A Quest of Honor," "The Fighting Shepherdess" and "The Yellow Typhoon" soon pass from memory. Miss Stewart is now working in "The Woman He Married."

A short while ago we met Charles Ray—in the flesh—for the second time. His has been a busy year—and years. And we bank he will pay for his recent brief vacation from the studios, with a 1922 chock full of work. Perhaps we will see another "The Old Swimming Hole," or a winsome "Nineteen and Phyllis," or some prototype of the many simple, rural characterizations he has enacted in a score of photoplays. Trust Arthur Kane's guiding hand for that. And so—we look forward to the production which will follow "R. S. V. P."

For some years a familiar figure and name was missed from the ranks of directors. But Harry A. Pollard is back again—and Universal is to be congratulated. It was in 1910 he waded into film waters with Marguerita Fisher's "There, Little Girl, Don't Cry." Then he played leads under his own direction, and followed with some years at Metro. Now he is starting on "The Leather Pushers" series. He has the stories—he has the titling ability (s'sh—we saw those for the first picture) and he has the directorial sense. The public will get the benefit of this prescription.

William Nigh has been a long time in the game. We doubt if he has ever done better work than in the past year. Look upon "Her Daughter in Law."

"School Days" with Wesley Barry (why christen him "Freckles" for good, Neilan?) and "Why Girls Leave Home." Quite a pretentious trio of successes for a director with a "past" and a "future."

Ever think life is short? Well, Charles Hutchinson says it isn't. And he ought to know. Leaving out the million or so of times he has chanced his neck for serial thrills in the past, consider the past twelve months. Thirty-one one-thousand reels of "The Double Adventure." The same for "Hurricane Hutch." Add 'em together and, knowing the Hutchinson love of pulling thrilling stunts, consider he is still with us—and will bob up strong next year.

Two years—four pictures accomplished. Also the accomplishment of being a success. That's Hope Hampton's record. In "Star Dust" she has surpassed any of her previous work. Just as in each former picture she succeeded in bettering her claims to stardom. In 1922 Miss Hampton will be seen in "The Light in the Dark" first of all. Looks like a "Happy New Year" for this star.

A writer of real scenarios as proven by "Disraeli" and the present Arliss vehicle, tentatively titled "Idle Hands," is Forrest Halsey's claim to distinction. Looking backwards we find him responsible for "The Wonderful Thing" adaptation, also "Ashes of Embers" and "Flames of the Flesh." Next success?

Even the trade hears little of a D. W. Griffith production until it is completed and launched upon world audiences. And after that, while the picture is being extolled, he drops from sight and is lost for months on a new piece of artistry. His New Year offering "Orphans of the Storm" was made under the title of "Two Orphans"—the story of which is known to everyone. After that—who can tell? We, in the meantime, look forward to "Orphans of the Storm."

Joseph Depew has many "New Years" in the offing—for he is but nine years old. His picture work during the past season includes "Clay Dollars," with Eugene O'Brien, "Salvation Nell" (Whitman Bennett and with Constance Talmadge in "Good for Nothing." Quite pretentious for a youngster. And we can't forget his stage success in "The Hero" with Richard Bennett.

They do say Reginald Denny may find his name in electric lights next season. Be that as it may, he has an excellent chance as the amateur boxer in Witwer's "Leather Pushers" stories. He should feel at home in the role, being an amateur boxer of note in real life. His recent pictures include "Footlights," "Paying the Piper," "The Iron Trail," etc.

It will be "George Randolph Chester Productions," Inc., next year for the noted authors of "Get Rich Wallingford" and other internationally known stories plan to make two elaborate screen attractions a year. They will write, scenarize, cast, direct, edit and title as they did in the case of "The Son of Wallingford," their last big picture for Vitagraph. Both George Randolph and Lillian Chester have unlimited confidence in their ability to "deliver the goods." Their past record entitles many others to share this confidence.

We watched William Christy Cabanne directing his latest Robertson-Cole feature "At the Stage Door." Later we saw the completed production. Certainly despite years of celluloid success behind him Cabanne keeps ever a fresh directorial viewpoint. To date he has created or written plots for over ninety photoplays. His latest R-C successes include "The Beloved Cheater," "What's a Wife Worth," "Lifes Twist," "The Barricade" and "The Stealers." And more good ones to come next year.

From the old Vitagraph Company Charles Beyer has had many affiliations and his rapidly developed screen talent has brought him to the limelight—and real parts. You'll see him in "Ten Nights in a Barroom" next, Oscar Apfel's big production. He has been associated in pictures with such stars as Anita Stewart, Clara Kimball Young, Edith Storey and Ina Claire. 1922 looks like a busy year for him.

Corinne Griffith Wins Popularity Test

Corinne Griffith, the Vitagraph star, was declared the winner in a star popularity test completed last week by the George J. Wehner chain of theatres, in Brooklyn, N. Y. Patrons of the ten Wehner theatres voted. The star's production which won her the greatest number of votes and the honor of being the first on the list was "What's Your Reputation Worth?" A close second was her most recent picture, "Moral Fibre."

Corinne Griffith is now on location in Florida, where exteriors are being filmed on her forthcoming feature, "Island Wives." This will follow "The Single Track" to release.

Bert Adler Associated with Art Brand, Inc.

Announcement comes this week of the expansion of Art Brand Productions, Inc., and the association therewith of Bert Adler, well known in the motion picture industry as a producer's representative.

Mr. Adler, it is announced, has affiliated himself as Treasurer with the new company, of which Joe Brand is President, this affiliation going hand in hand with the announcement that Art Brand has expanded its activities to include not only the handling of the series of two-reel featurettes starring Charles Ray, but that other important acquisitions for the independent market have also been secured and will be announced as ready for release shortly. No definite announcement is made at present regarding these pictures, but it is said that there are scheduled several features that will prove important box-office pictures.

The C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation will act as the distributing medium for the Art Brand Productions.

"The Soul Seeker" to Be Holubar's Next

Allen Holubar has contracted to make six productions starring Dorothy Phillips at the United Studios in Los Angeles. It is planned to release the first of these photoplays, "The Soul Seeker," through Associated First National Pictures, Inc.

"The Soul Seeker" has been adopted from a story by Harvey Gates and is described as a dramatic outdoor story in which Miss Phillips has a most unique characterization to portray, the most unusual, in fact, of her career.

Cosmopolitan Reproduces East Side Factory

A study in realism on the screen is afforded by "Just Around the Corner," Cosmopolitan Productions' newest release through Paramount. In this picture, based on a Fannie Hurst story, there is a scene in an artificial flower factory. The director, Frances Marion, was not content with a conventional factory scene; she wanted a factory from life so she scoured the lower East Side of New York in company with her assistant, Stewart Heisler.

After several days' wandering through narrow streets and into loft buildings, Miss Marion and Mr. Heisler eventually discovered in a dingy, miserable and dirty basement the artificial flower factory that impressed the director as having the proper atmosphere. The place was completely photographed from several angles and the photographs were laid before Joseph Urban, the production manager, and in a short time Mr. Urban had the setting complete.

Fox Luminaries Hold Impromptu Reunion

The New York studios of Fox Film Corporation were the scene of an impromptu reunion of Fox stars and directors this week when a number of these from the West Coast studios dropped into the big Manhattan production plant.

Shirley Mason, who had reached Chicago en route back to California after personal appearances in the South and a two weeks' visit to New York, was there met by Bernard Durning, Fox director on the West coast; Sol Wurtzel, studio manager for William Fox in California, and William Russell, whose latest picture, "The Roof Tree," will be released Christmas Day. With them she returned to New York.

Emmett J. Flynn, the director, had arrived in the metropolis a few days before, and soon after him came Charles Jones—this Fox star paying his first visit to the nation's largest city.

The stars will visit most of the theatres and a big Christmas party is planned for their entertainment; but they will all be back at the coast plant ready to begin work on new productions by the first of the year.

As 1921 Appears to a Director

By Robert G. Vignola

DESPITE the numerous elements that have attempted to drag down the screen during the year 1921, I am firmly convinced that the twelve months just passed has done the motion picture at least one great good. This great good is in the production end of the business. Far from deploring the growing strength of censorship sentiment I believe it has been of immense benefit to the motion picture from an artistic point of view. It has forced a change in production methods which I advocated a long time ago. Whatever else it may do it is bringing the motion picture into its own. There is no doubt that censorship must be stamped out because a fettered screen is like a fettered giant—helpless and ridiculous. Nevertheless the censorship agitation has brought the directorial fraternity to a realization of the true psychology of the screen.

With the restrictions placed by the various censor bodies upon certain scenes of high dramatic values which in the past have been depicted in infinite detail, the director has had to turn to a different method of telling his story and at the same time satisfy the censors. He has been forced to leave a great deal to the imagination, to leave a great deal unpictured and yet so picture what he was permitted that the unpictured could easily be imagined. Thus he has not only complied with the censor's requirements but he has raised the artistic standards of the screen.

Some time ago I advocated this very thing and as evidence of my faith in the idea I put it to use in my own productions. It is plain to be seen that the secret of human enjoyment is in imagining things. Every individual likes to imagine what he pleases independent of everybody else. Nobody wants to be deprived of this individuality. And I maintain that the motion picture cannot become ideal until it stimulates imagination. If it is to become a genuine art it must appeal to the mind's eye as well as the body's eye. This very development is being brought about by the wave of censorship. Unable to show certain scenes in detail, directors have been forced to take recourse to the imagination and leave much unpictured that under ordinary circumstances would have been flashed upon the screen in all completeness.

Then, another thing which the past year has done for the screen has been to arouse interest in the real motive of the motion picture. We have, and for that matter still are, laboring under the handicap of being judged wrongly. During the year just ended we have awakened to the fact that what really troubled the screen was a lack of a definite basis or canons of criticism.

What is needed most to-day is to educate the public to know and realize that the motion picture is neither literature nor stage drama, nor music, nor painting, nor sculpture, nor architecture, but an art in itself, distinct from those arts though affiliated with them.

The biggest handicap we have to contend with to-day is the public misunderstanding of what the motion picture really is or what it is trying to accomplish in the arts.

"The Western Will Live"—Carey

TO the oft-repeated query "is the demand for Western dramas dying out," Harry Carey, Universal star, who has for years been identified with virile outdoor roles, emphatically negatives the question. He says:

"The Western drama will never die because it is America's distinctive type.

"Yet Western drama, especially as we have seen it on the screen, has been most bitterly neglected by producer, actor and director.

"The year 1922 will see the true type of western come into its own and it will be a far better and more appealing drama than the film fan has expected.

"Dramas founded on society and business have become dramas of detail but the western has been compiled largely of thrills and lawless situations.

"Tales of the great American west will live just as the tales of Greece and Rome have lived after the fall of those nations. Society drama is built on the sham of social decorum and the mad strife for wealth to the almost total eradication of human interest and heart appeal. Instead we have satire and cynicism.

"But the great open heart of the west is as yet uncovered with the thin veneer of social convention which the ultra-civilization of the east will spread as it creeps further west. In the western drama men are men and women are women and they act as such. This gives the chance for human interest and heart appeal which the eastern society drama denies both artist and director.

"The motion picture fan demands human interest touches and only stories of that type will be the successes of 1922.

"Because society drama offers only class appeal and western drama appeals to the heart I predict that the coming year will see the human-interest-western rise to the high water mark in popular favor."

Montagne's Record for Scenarios

Edward J. Montagne, who made the adaptation of "A Man's Home," the Selznick feature at the Capitol theatre this week, can perhaps lay claim to have written more original stories and picturizations than any other scenarist. During his ten year's connection with the Motion Picture Industry, he has had produced over three hundred original stories and almost as many adaptations.

Selznick Tender Luncheon to Ladies of Press

In celebration of the success of "A Man's Home," in honor of the author, Anna Steese Richardson, a luncheon was tendered ladies of the newspaper and trade press at the Hotel Pennsylvania, on December 14. It was most unique and unusual, in that it is the first time anything like a representative body of New York newspaper women have been assembled in conjunction with such an affair.

Motion pictures were taken of the gathering while luncheon was being served. In less than two hours a print was shown the guests, many of whom remained to witness the screening of the major film "A Man's Home," which followed.

The Selznick organization was represented by Agnes Johnston, who acted as hostess ably assisted by Bessie Mack of the Capitol theatre. Grace Valentine and Margaret Seddon, of the cast, were among the guests; a part of them follows:

Mabel McElliott, Illustrated Daily News; Martha Coman, New York Herald; Margaret Rohe Howard, representing the United Press; Helen Bullitt Lowry, New York Times; Ada Patterson, New York American; Jane Dixon and Florence Smith Vincent, Evening Telegram; Virginia Barrows, Evening Globe; Mrs. William Johnston, Sunday World; Sophie Irene Loeb, Evening World; M. Bruening, Evening Post; Grace Wynden Vail, Journal and American. Some of the Brooklyn dailies were represented, and the theatrical and trade press by; Helen Rockwell and Susanne Sexton, Morning Telegraph; Alice Carroll and Frances Weller, New York Review; Miss Fergus, Picture Play; Dorothy Moran and Ruth Rosenberg, Dramatic Mirror, Dorothea B. Herzog, Movie Weekly; Mrs. Sime Silverman, Variety; Mary Kelly, Moving Picture World and Lillian R. Gale, Motion Picture News.

The Season's Greetings

MABEL NORMAND

West Coast Production Trend

By J. C, JESSEN

THERE is reason to believe the crop of independent productions for 1922 will be much greater than during the present year.

At the present time the several announcements of management of the large producing distributing companies plans to curtail production points to a smaller number of program pictures being made in and about Los Angeles during the coming year.

Efforts are being made by producers to cut the cost of production and in some studios a limit has been placed on the price to be expended for a picture which means that the production cost will be reduced materially. In one instance the maximum to be spent on a picture is $110,000, in another the maximum is $90,000. The heads of these producing companies expect to hold the quality of their pictures to the same level as of the past. They propose to do this partially by reducing salaries, partially by preventing waste and partially by adding efficiency that will prevent loss of time and the taking of scenes that are never used.

Generally speaking the producers who heretofore spent money like drunken sailors fully realize that they must meet the demand of the exhibitors for lower rentals and they are trying to produce pictures suitable for lower rentals without reducing the quality.

If history repeats itself there are going to be some mergers. In the past rumors of a merger always precede the actual announcement of the merger by many months. For months there have been rumors of mergers and when the announcements come, as they surely will within the next few months, they will be no surprise to people of the producing field for the mergers have all been talked over and the result predicted.

The coming year will see far more independent productions made in the West than in previous years. The people who are attempting to bring new money into the film industry by the organization of companies capitalized by people outside the industry are of the opinion that the industry needs features that will gross something like one hundred to one hundred and twenty-five thousand. Such promoters find that they cannot induce capital into the business unless there is a ready market for the product to be made. So much money has been expended in the past on what might be termed super-pictures that did not hit that goal in distribution that the men of money are skeptical. In other words the men with dollars for investment have analyzed the situation and come to the conclusion that there are two classes of pictures, one that will gross from one hundred to one hundred and twenty-five thousand and one that will gross more than four hundred thousand. In other words an independent picture to make good must sell for less than the regular program picture and the super production to make good must go way above the average program picture.

At the present time there are no less than eighty independent companies in and about Los Angeles. Probably half of this number have the finances to go ahead with the making of pictures and the other half is in the state of financing. Probably one-third of the number plan to make one and two-reel subjects, some comedies and some western, while there are one or two that think there is a place for a two-reel drama that contains a good story well filmed but not of an expensive nature.

It is doubtful if there has been a time in the past three or four years when the film industry was bringing as small an amount into Los Angeles as at the present time and with the curtailment of production that several of the studios has announced this weekly sum will be greatly reduced during the first two or three months of the coming year. The employment agency officials say "things are very quiet." The rental-house owners say they could take care of more business and professionals greet each other with "when are conditions going to improve."

On the other hand it is pointed out that theatre admissions have materially increased over a month or two ago and rental totals amount to a greater sum. The pessimistic mental attitude of the East is reflected throughout the producing industry and some voice the opinion that distributors found they can secure pictures at low prices if conditions look dark and so continue painting the outlook as dark as possible in the hope of regulating prices by their predictions.

The Sheriff has not placed a padlock on any studios nor are conditions as bad as talk makes them appear. Interviews with studio executives brings out the fact that the production end is merely marking time until the exhibiting and distributing departments catch up. Heads of Los Angeles studios believe the coming year will see the industry back in the flourishing condition of a few months back.

Selznick Stars Busy at New York Studios

THAT production at the Selznick studios in East Forty-eighth street, New York City, is going steadily forward in the same highly efficient manner which characterized the company's work at the studios in Fort Lee is indicated by the announcement that two of the Selznick stars are to begin work almost immediately upon the completion of their last picture.

Owen Moore, who is just finishing the biggest picture the Selznick company has ever made, is scheduled to begin another big production almost immediately. The new Owen Moore picture will be directed by Victor Heerman. Director Henry Lehrman, who is finishing up the shots on the present Moore picture, will have a great deal of work to do with this production before it is released some time in February.

Elaine Hammerstein, whose "Why Announce Your Marriage?" has not yet been released from the film editor's hands, will be back on the job at the studio before another week has passed. The title of the forthcoming Elaine Hammerstein picture has not been announced. Ralph Ince will direct it, with only a few days of elapsed time between his finishing with Eugene O'Brien in "Channing of the Northwest" and his taking up the next Hammerstein release.

Serial Market Booming Says Manheimer

Backing his convictions that the present demand for pictures that will stimulate business for the many large theatres that have been built during the last few years, will create a new field for the booking of high class serials, E. S. Manheimer of Photoplay Serials Corporation, has released the new Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber chaptered photoplay, "The Mysterious Pearl," to State Rights exchanges and announces the immediate sale of the latest thriller from the pens of J. Grubb Alexander and Harvey Gates to several well-known exchanges in important territories.

Every one of the fifteen chapters of the new serial was completed and the complete line of advertising matter, including a special advance press sheet, made ready for immediate delivery before the release of the production to independent buyers was announced.

Jack Hoxie's Latest Ben Wilson-Arrow

Nathan Hirsh, president of Aywon Film Corp. and Photocraft Productions, Inc.

Louis Weiss Cuts Short Trip to Exchanges

Louis Weiss, secretary of adventures of Tarzan Serial Sales Corporation, returned to New York unexpectedly this week, cutting short a trip which was to take him around the country to visit the various exchanges which are handling "Adventures of Tarzan," starring Elmo Lincoln. Weiss was called back to the New York offices to affix his signature to an important contract relative to the series of all-star author pictures which Clarion Photoplays, Inc., will produce during the coming year. Shortly after January 1st he will leave New York to complete his itinerary around the country. During the short period he was on the road Weiss visited Toronto and Montreal, Canada and Detroit, Michigan. He reports conditions in these two territories as vastly improved and the various state right distributors are looking forward to increased business early in the New Year.

"His Nibs" Is Sold for Missouri and Kansas

The Liberty Theatres Corporation, operating in Kansas and Western Missouri, with a home office in Denver, Colorado, has just announced that the first big feature arranged for distribution by this newly formed organization is "His Nibs," the Exceptional Pictures Production of which Charles (Chic) Sale is the star, the rights to which were secured by this company from His Nibs Syndicate, Inc., L. L. Hiller, president.

Two Unsold Territories in "Heart of North"

With the selling of an additional territory this week on "The Heart of the North," the feature of the Canadian Northwest which George H. Davis and Joe Brandt produced and are State Righting—this sale being to Columbia Film Service of Pittsburgh for the Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia territory—this feature is sold solid with the exception of two territories. The territories still left open are the Ohio, and the Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois, for which negotiations are already under way.

"Where is the Star?"

for me." That is well enough, but there is no individual effort directed in behalf of one person on the part of the staff of any of the big companies and the work is for the greater part a matter of routine. In this regard it is well for the individual to reflect on the possibility that he is leaving in the hands of his management the power to unmake as well as make him, and one does not have to delve too far in the past to recall instances where this actually took place.

In advertising there are varied methods and one of them is that which is employed by Henry Ford. You can call Henry what you will: "a smart man," "a crazy man" or "a fool,' but nevertheless he is without doubt America's best little press agent for Henry Ford. Rest assured whatever the big topic of the day is Henry is right there in the midst of it in the public prints. Even the world war wasn't big enough to keep Henry off the front pages. War news was the news of the moment, so Henry spent a couple of million dollars on a peace ship and a plan to "get the boys out of the trenches by Christmas." That was advertising for Henry, only instead of buying so much space he spent the money on something that would get the space. His railroad investment was another of his space grabbing stunts, and within a few weeks he crashed into the news of the disarmament conference by offering to buy the battleships that the Government was going to scrap.

Surely Henry Ford has a lot of money and he is at the top of the heap in the auto game, but he is still spending his dough to keep Henry Ford in the limelight by advertising himself.

He isn't going to slip into the discard if he can help it. He knows that it is just as easy for a big one to slip as the fellow that was never known at all.

Speaking of slipping, have you heard of Hood's Sarsaparilla lately? There's an instance of "it doesn't pay to advertise yourself or your product."

You can't sell clams without blowing your horn! Blowing a horn is just one way of advertising that you've got 'em for sale! By the same token you, Mr. Mrs. and Miss Picture Player, should use the trade papers of your profession as your horn and advertise unless you want to be one of those who are spoken of as "I wonder what became of them; one never hears anything about them any more."

Film Author Addresses Women's Clubs

Coincident with its engagement at the Capitol Theatre, New York City, the big Selznick special, "A Man's Home," opened for a week at the Stanley theatre, Philadelphia, Monday afternoon, December 19th.

At the instance of the Selznick company Anna Steese Richardson, author of the photoplay, in collaboration with Edmund Breese, went to Philadelphia the Thursday before the picture opened at the Stanley, and on that day and the day following made six separate appearances before leading women's clubs in the Quaker City where she had been invited to speak on the subject of "Better Motion Pictures." "A Man's Home" was given a prominent place in Mrs. Richardson's remarks.

Ceiling as Screen for Hospital Patients

"Penrod," Marshall Neilan's latest picture in which Wesley Barry is starred was screened before the bed-ridden patients of the California hospital, Los Angeles, recently.

The method of projection was on the ceiling and an unfinished print of the picture was used for the purpose. Wesley Barry acted as host in the program of entertainment and explained the action of the missing scenes of the picture. The idea proved a big success and a plan is being prepared by Mr. Neilan in which all theatres playing "Penrod" may show this film at local hospitals at little expense. The press sheet on "Penrod" will contain details on this stunt.

Weiss Brothers Receive Many Offers

According to the offices of Artclass Pictures Corporation, which organization controls the massive film spectacle based on the Old Testament, and which occupied the time of the foremost producing company in Italy for more than five years, Weiss Brothers are in receipt of many inquiries relative to the ultimate disposition of this film for the American market.

Installation and Proper Care of the Theatre Organ

Exhibitor Should Study Needs Before Selection

BY H. J. WERNER

FROM a close observation of the difficulties in properly conducting a motion picture house the ideal exhibitor must possess the qualifications of an extensive education in the liberal arts, finances and diplomacy in addition to considerable executive ability.

Theatre patrons are determined that everything presented to them must be worthy of their consideration including music, photo-drama, decorations, lighting and other necessities essential to their physical comfort.

Unlike Caesar's Gaul the motion picture public are divided into three unequal parts. First there is the plain "fan" who goes to the theatre because he thoroughly enjoys it; second there is the patron whose interest is served by pictures and music and third is a more sophisticated class who take a keener delight in the concert and the musical interpretation of the photo-drama. In view of the fact that the latter classes are assuming greater proportion, it is well for the progressive exhibitor to give greater consideration to the quality of music he is offering his patronage.

Economic conditions throughout the country have affected the motion picture industry to an appreciable extent and theatre overheads have necessarily dropped. However, the fundamentals of rent, light, heat and film expense are being maintained so that the orchestra pit alone bears the brunt of lower overhead. Orchestras have been curtailed or entirely eliminated and the organ has come into its own not alone from its economic and adequate artistic results but because of the disquietude resulting from temperamental and labor difficulties proportionally incidental to the number of musicians employed.

The majority of picture patrons will concede that the organ for picture purposes seems to be the instrument that furnishes the music most of the time in the greater number of medium and high class theatres. It is therefore necessary that the condition in which the organ is maintained should be of vital importance to the management and finally to the public.

Ordinarily when Mr. Exhibitor purchased his organ he did not hesitate to inform the world that it was the "largest and grandest" and probably boosted the price over its actual cost. However, the regular patrons will lack enthusiastic appreciation of the music if an inferior organist is retained at the console or the instrument itself fails to live up to expectations.

The selection of specifications suitable in size and design for the house or the purchase of the instrument from a reputable manufacturer is only a start in the right direction. The continued success of the instrument requires proper chambers for its reception, expert installation men and an operator properly trained for organ playing.

The instrument itself must be a theatre organ and not a church organ. The church organ has its mechanism and various sets of pipes arranged and voiced so that a composition of pure organ literature can be adequately rendered. The church organ has its various tonal divisions arranged so that each one is complete in itself and measures up to a standard that tradition has imposed upon organ builder and composer alike. The church organ contains the dignified diapasons and sufficient reed tone to make the effect homogeneous; has certain solo voices, a brilliant ensemble and a few extra fancy stops. The church organ has certain mechanical features for combining stops and "coupling" manuals rendering conditions which make it impossible for the organist to use stops on the different manuals simultaneously.

A theatre organ is designed so that the organist can play anything that has ever been written for the organ and in fact any music that it is physically possible to play. The tonal character of the manuals on the theatre organ are arranged differently. One keyboard should contain all the suitable accompanimental voices and certain rhythmic traps or effects which are used in conjunction with the accompaniment.

The next most important manual should contain all the solo as well as the accompanimental voices so that every possible voice may be blended together by the organist in order that he may vary the tone quality of his melodies as much as possible. By this arrangement the organist's work is greatly simplified as he does not have to continually change the position of his hands from one keyboard to another to blend solo voices which unfortunately are not placed on the same keyboard.

The tone of the church organ is of course dignified and sonorous and of a quality suitable for ecclesiastical use and for polyphonic music. The theatre requires not only certain tones which are fitted for church use but also every shade of tone found in a symphony orchestra that the organ builder can reproduce.

In addition to the proper arrangement of the various stops and pipes to render everything as available and convenient as possible to the organist, we must consider such matters as the speed and rapidity of the organ action; the depth and weight of the manual and pedal touch, the wind pressure used and the resulting tone, scale and diameters of the various pipes, reliability of the action and a thousand and one other details which go to make up a good theatrical instrument.

Space will not permit our going into these very vital points

Valuable Information for Exhibitors

Ignorance of the proper care necessary to keep a large organ in good condition, has cost many exhibitors large sums. The NEWS has received many inquiries concerning this phase of theatre management. We have made effort to answer the inquiries at various times. We asked Mr. W. J. Werner, president of the American Photo Player Co. to prepare an article on the installation and care of the organ. His article is presented here. The American Photo Player Co. manufacture the Robert-Morton Organ.

as exhaustively as they deserve. Very brief thought will show how absolutely essential each and every point is to a successful organ. The question has often been asked, which is the more important in an organ, the action work or the tone. Some say one and some the other, but the fact remains that they are both equally essential. Good tone is useless if the action is so imperfect that the pipes fail to respond properly and a perfect action is of little use if the tone that it presents to the ears of the audience is crude or unpleasant. Thus everything has to be right and working efficiently all the time if Mr. Exhibitor is going to enjoy the best music that his organist can offer to his patrons. The health of the organ is as necessary as is the health to the organist—both must be in the pink of condition to do their best work.

Chambers and Installation

Properly designed organ chambers should be built of hollow tile or concrete coated inside with hard, smooth finish plaster, which will properly confine the tone when the swell shades are closed and efficiently reflect it out into the auditorium when the shades are opened. Not only should the walls, floors and ceiling be strong enough to withstand the very considerable bombardment of sound waves without tone leakage, but the shades or fronts must be instantaneous in operation and of sufficient area to allow the unobstructed egress of the tone. These chambers should be absolutely dry and clean and if the organ is placed in more than one room, the chambers should be of the same height if possible so that the temperature is even, which results in the organ staying in tune much longer and a consequent reduction in maintenance costs.

Organ chambers can generally be planned in one of several locations in a theatre, according to the particular house. The plan most frequently adopted is to use the space usually occupied by the boxes on a level with the first balcony. Frequently one or both sides of the wings are used with the tone either speaking on to the stage itself or being projected through grilles on either side of the proscenium arch. In the former plan the tone usually mixes better and has a chance to blend before reaching the audience, but is sadly dampened if the curtains be lowered. In the latter plan, obviously, curtains do not interfere and the brilliancy of the tone is not impaired, but the effect would possibly be unpleasant to members of the audience seated close to the sound outlets in the event of the balcony running right up to the sides of the proscenium.

Probably the very best place and the one least frequently used is what is known as a proscenium installation,—the organ being bracketted on either side of and over the arch, a grille being built, which has the effect of making a very massive and handsome proscenium. The organ is entirely screened,—is easy of access and in large theatres can be practically on one level,—and with possibly a small work shop and entrance from one of the upper lobbies.

A word to architects might not be amiss. Consultation with an organ expert before the building is actually in construction may be the means of easily obtaining a good installation which will redound to the credit of everyone concerned. An undersized grille or a sound pocket may reduce the organ's efficiency as much as 50%. Most organ builders will be glad to cooperate in the design of the theatre and are really interested in having things right.

A case is quoted wherein the sound opening was placed close to a large ventilator which worked on the exhaust system with the result that a large percent of the tone went not only over the heads of the people but clear out of doors.

Maintenance

The action of the modern organ consists of an enormous multiplication of a few very simple parts, contacts, cables, magnets, primaries, relays, etc. While the component parts are in themselves very simple and not liable to derangement, the fact remains that the simplest mechanism if multiplied a thousand fold is certain to require some adjustment and regulation.

The blower and motors must be regularly oiled and the bearings and commutators attended to. The blower room kept neat and free from dirt and dust, which would blow into the organ and might possibly cause ciphers by lodging on the armatures or valves. In any event the dirt will pass into the pipes themselves and lodge in the nicks and windways or even get beaten into the metal of the rapidly vibrating brass tongues.

In addition to the motors, the low voltage electrical system which controls the action has also to receive attention. A moderate sized modern theatre organ contains probably upwards of ten thousand separate make and break contacts. It is true that great thought and care have been exercised in their design and manufacture but still it is only to be expected that some attention is required.

Again there is the tonal side of the organ. The pipes must be kept in tune and in proper regulation regarding power, promptness of speech and pitch. Dirt from the blower and ordinary dust affect the power and promptness and also indirectly the pitch, and differences of temperature change the pitch of the pipes in varying degrees.

The actual functioning of the different kinds of pipes is a subject worthy of deep study and one which cannot possibly be treated in an even partially comprehensive manner in a brief article such as this.

Suffice it to say that the tone of a given pipe has three attributes, quality, quantity and pitch. These attributes are present as a result of the use of certain scales, i. e., lengths and diameters of the various pipes in a set. The height and width of the mouth, treatment of the windway or, in the case of a reed pipe, the thickness and treatment of the tongues and also the quantity of wind admitted to the pipe all affect the tone. A change in any one of the above quantities

"Great!"—said A. P. Lyons

"What do you think of Terra Cotta as a facing material for theatres?" we asked Mr. A. P. Lyons, Managing Director of the Peoples Theatre. "Great!" was his enthusiastic reply.

We then asked him several other questions: Did he regard the attractive appearance of his theatre as a valuable advertisement? Did he consider that it attracted customers? If building a new building would he specify Terra Cotta? Would he recommend it to other theatre owners?

To all of these questions his answer was the same — an emphatic "yes."

Low initial cost, an almost negligible maintenance cost, beauty, and ease of cleaning—these are the features of Terra Cotta that have made Mr. Lyons an enthusiast. Numerous complimentary remarks concerning the appearance of his theatre, as well as an ever increasing patronage, have convinced Mr. Lyons of the business-getting value of a handsome Terra Cotta exterior.

Perhaps you plan to build a new theatre. Or perhaps you are considering the alteration of your present one. In either case we can send you information which may save you time and money. Address National Terra Cotta Society, 1 Madison Avenue, New York, N. Y.

Theatre Built on Pueblo Style

Herford Tynes Cowling, photographer for the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel pictures, discovered the El Onate theatre, Santa Fe, New Mexico, which he says "Is the only theatre on the Indian Pueblo Tyne in this country—or in any other country I know of—and is unique in design."

"The people of Santa Fe are building a lot of their homes on this type of architecture—which is the only truly American type of architecture."

The photograph shows the theatre draped for Paramount Week. The ladder is decorative and not a necessary means of progressing from one part of the building to another. Santa Fe is a town of 3,500 and has a large Mexican population. The unique architecture gives Manager John H. McManus a decided edge on two competing houses.

Diamond Theatre Opens

The handsome Diamond Theatre recently built at Bowling Green, Ky., would be a credit to a city many times the size. It is thoroughly modern and fireproof, of brick, concrete and steel, and is a structure of beauty and refinement.

It has a seating capacity of 1100—750 downstairs and 350 in the balcony; a length of 160 feet and a width of 56 feet; three stories high; proscenium; eight dressing rooms to accomodate fifty people for occasional vaudeville. There are four boxes and narrow loge balconies on both sides.

The theatre is provided with a modern cooling system that changes the air every three minutes in summer and every seven minutes in winter; also a refrigerating plant, heating and lighting systems, independent of the city. The lobby is wide and splendid, with double glass doors of handsome design; mirrors and potted plants add beauty here. Rest rooms are provided off the foyer for men and ladies.

The projecting room is a model, of brick and concrete, with two Simplex machines, stereoptican and spotlights. It is exceptionally large and roomy and cool. It is a 120-ft. throw to the screen.

The interior is of quiet tone, with plaster walk of ground-in tints, green gold and tan being the general color scheme. A three-color lighting control gives wide effects of beauty. Special staff relief work ornaments the fronts of balconies and boxes. Silk draperies add luxury and finish. A beaded screen is used. A Robt. Morton organ and a six-piece orchestra furnish the music.

The Diamond, built at a cost of $150,000, is owned by the Setter Amusement Co., Inc., of Cattarragus, N. Y. C. A. Setter is local manager. A certain novelty about the theatre is that Mr. Setter was his own architect, contractor and decorator, having had years of experience in this line in New York. He superintended the wiring, too, and planned some original designs in electric fixtures, and added some of his own ideas to the cooling and heating systems.

Seats were furnished by Haywood Bros. & Wakefield, Chicago, Ill.; millwork by Forbes Mfg. Company., Hopkinsville, Ky.; tile by Hagan, Magruder Company, Louisville, Ky.; brick by T. L. Herbert Sons, Nashville, Tenn.; electric fixtures by Burdoff Bros., Louisville, Ky. and Swanson Electric Company., Evansville, Ind.; relief work by National Plastic Relief Company, Cincinnati, O.; and stone by the Whitestone Quarries, Bowling Green, Ky.

Bigger and Better Business for 1922

Joseph Hornstein, vice president and general manager of the Howells Cone Equipment Company, New York, predicts better business throughout the motion picture industry for 1922.

"We have all felt a decided tightening of the purse strings during the past twelve months," states Mr. Hornstein, "but there is every indication that conditions will be better before 1922 gets under way. Our business has been picking up steadily and reports from our salesmen indicate a large volume of orders following the New Year."

English Camera to Make 30,000 Exposures a Second

At a recent meeting of English scientists Sir Robert Hadfield, the famous steel maker, gave a description of a new cinema camera with which photographs up to as high as 5,000 per second have been taken. This is very nearly at the rate of four miles a minute.

According to reports the camera weighed well over three tons and required a special housing that in itself was twelve by six feet in dimensions.

The inventor, supported by able technicians, consider it quite feasible that the same camera with slight modifications can be constructed to record over thirty thousand exposures a second. This means that the film would be carried past the aperture at the unheard of rate of twenty-five miles a minute, or at about the speed of a bullet from an express rifle.

Texas House Leased

Eaton & Glenn have leased the Olympic theatre at Lockey, Texas, from C. R. Wilkinson. The new owners will add a number of improvements in the near future.

Selling Many Tanks

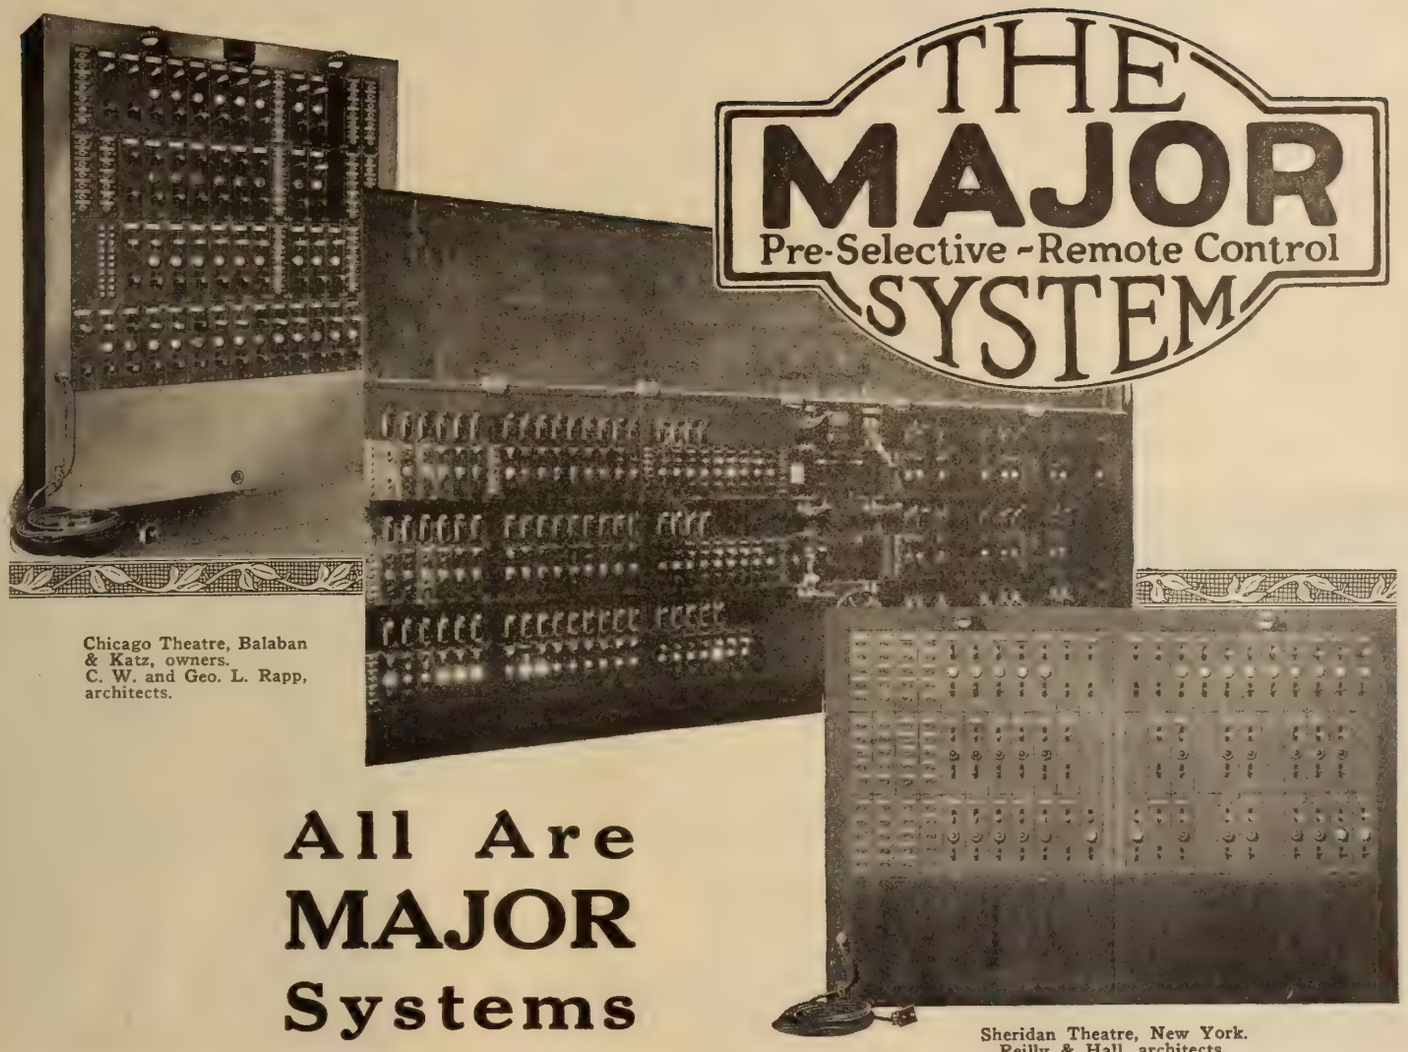
A. J. Corcoran, of Jersey City, manufacturer of developing tanks, is fast becoming the leader in that field. The tanks manufactured by A. J. Corcoran are of a quality that demand repeat orders. The motion picture industry has become one of their chief lines and experts have been secured to design the tanks to fit the exacting requirements of this industry.

Dan Barton Reports Good Business for Past Twelve Months

Actual business conditions in the motion picture industry were not as bad as estimated during 1921, is the statement made by Dan Barton, of the Bartola Musical Instrument Company, after a survey of the last twelve months' business done by his firm, which, he says, has been very good.

Mr. Barton has exceptional facilities for observation as he is in personal touch with exhibitors in all parts of the country through his continual contact with his customers, this being one of the fixed policies of the Bartola Company.

The best argument as to the present condition of the industry and the excellent outlook for the future, is based on the great number of new theatres where the Bartola Musical Instrument Company has placed musical instruments, and the territory covered by these installations which shows that motion picture theatre men have made progress even though there have been some setbacks.



The Bartola Company has placed many organs in theatres already completed but a great many of their contracts have been in new theatres, and the many orders on hand for 1922 installations indicate another good year.

Palace, Antigo, Wis.; State Theatre, Brookings, S. D.; Bijou Theatre, Battle Creek, Mich.; Garden Theatre, Columbus, Ohio; Main Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio; Lucier Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio; Five Points Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio; Tibbets Theatre, Coldwater, Mich.; Atlas Theatre, Cheyenne, Wyo.; Amus Theatre, Cheyenne, Wyo.; Strand Theatre, Cloquet, Minn.; Foy Theatre, Dallas, Texas; Oakman Theatre, Detroit, Mich.; Castle Theatre, Detroit, Mich.; Dixon Theatre, Dixon, Ill.; Doric Theatre, Duluth, Minn.; O'Klare Theatre, Eau Claire, Wis.; Grove Theatre, Elgin, Ill.; Orpheum Theatre, Fond du Lac, Wis.; Egypt Theatre, Fort Worth, Texas.; Majestic Theatre, Grand Island, Neb.

All Are MAJOR Systems

Sheridan Theatre, New York. Reilly & Hall, architects.

The Major System of Pre-Selective Remote Control is very flexible in construction, as well as in operation. It fills every lighting control requirement of motion pictures, vaudeville or legitimate theatres better than any other type or kind of switchboard, old or new. Theatres equipped with a Major System can change from photoplays to vaudeville or legitimate without change of apparatus. In case an expansion is desired, it is much easier to add to a Major Switchboard than to any other type.

Mainstreet Theatre, Kansas City. Orpheum Circuit. C. W. & Geo. L. Rapp, architects.

All of the above advantages are in addition to the primary advantage of Major Control, such as Pre-Selection, Cumulative Control and Extended Remote Control. Major Systems do away largely with fire and panic hazards. They cannot be injured, or do injury by careless meddling, and they can be locked against unauthorized handling.

If you do not know fully the advantages of the Major System it will pay you to get complete details before making a decision. The Major System can be used in modernizing an old theatre as well as equipping a new one. Write for the "Theatre Lighting Questionnaire."

Kerasotes Brothers Open Their Third Moving Picture House in Springfield

Strand Theatre, Transformed from Old Bank Building, Is a Splendid Show Place

The Strand, Springeld, Illinois, newest motion picture theatre, opened its doors recently. The Strand is owned and operated by Louis and Gus Kerasotes, two men who have been in the film business here for the past twelve years. The Royal, one of their houses, was abandoned with the building of the new house; the Savoy, a second run theatre, is still operating.

The new Strand occupies a splendid location at Sixth and Washington streets, which for years housed the First National Bank. The building was purchased last spring by the Kerasotes for $125,000. It occupies a lot about 40 x 110. More than $75,000 was spent in transforming the building into a modern show house. Helmle & Helmle, builders of the new Lyric here, designed the new Strand. In general appearance it resembles the Lyric, but has several features used by the Capitol theatre, St. Louis. It is the most beautiful of local theatres. The seating capacity is around 800—500 seats being on the ground floor and there are 300 more in the spacious balcony.

The theatre front is of pulsichrome terra cotta, which gives a pleasing appearance. The foyer is lined in beautifully matched marble and is decorated in ivory and gold. The plastering is particularly rich in ornament and the decorations are in old gold, ivory and polychrome. The proscenium arch is exceptionally fine and is an open filigree of gold, back of which is located the $12,000 Hope-Jones Wurlitzer pipe organ. Ventilating is by the Typhoon Fan system. The theatre is heated by steam, with radiation so placed that no cold air ever strikes a patron even when doors and exits are opened.

The largest and finest booth in the city is built into the Strand. It has all conveniences for the operators, and houses two of the new Powers' machines. The booth is located in the balcony.

A special Gold Fibre Minusa screen was installed in the new theatre.

The new Strand boasts of a promenade under the balcony, with the managers' offices and ladies rest rooms also placed under the balcony seats. Two wide stairways, one on either side, lead to the chairs upstairs. The view from any seat in the Strand is good, as there is neither pillar nor post to spoil the line of vision.

The box office is built close to the walk, so that it is very easy to handle the crowds. An inner lobby of no small proportions is able to accommodate quite a large number of people in case of waits. At the rear of the theatre is a standing room space sufficiently large enough to permit easy access at all times.

One of the most striking features of the new Strand is the beautiful marquise. This was from the E. T. Barnum Company of Detroit. Attractive by day, it is doubly beautiful at night. It adds greatly to the smart, trim appearance of the cozy playhouse.—Dagon.

View of the Strand, Springfield, Ill., on the opening night

gold, rose and blue, together with the hamonizing lighting effects and interior equipment, produces an atmosphere of simplicity and refinement.

The theatre has a terra cotta front. The main auditorium consists of a closed vestibule and a large foyer, from which broad stairs lead on each side to the artistically arranged mezzanine floor and promenade, where are to be found the women's rest and men's smoking rooms. In the front of the balcony, 10 loges are located, entrance to which is from the mezzanine floor.

I. Sarge Taffae of New York, designed the attractive stage setting, which is arranged for staging prologues. A large Robert Morton organ is concealed behind handsome grills on each side of the proscenium arch, with the console located in the orchestra pit. A seven-piece orchestra, including harp soloist, will be furnished, in addition to the organ.

The lighting effects, designed by Black & Boyd of New York, are novel, the various controls being located in the operator's booth. Powers projectors are used.

Ventilation of the theatre has been given especially careful consideration, with a result that the patrons are sure of obtaining warm and healthful air in winter and cool in summer. The especially-designed ventilation system was constructed and installed by the W. P. Kirk Company of Bridgeport.

Peter F. Dawe of Bridgeport, also proprietor of the Palace and Bijou moving picture houses in that city, will give his personal attention to management of the new theatre. He is vice-president of the M. P. T. O. A., and is one of the organizers of the Connecticut division. He will be assisted by Martin A. Heanue, who has been first vice-president of the M. P. T. O. A. in Connecticut and who is now chairman of the executive committtee.—AGARD.

Dawe, Bridgeport, a Modern House

Credited with being the last word in movie-playhouse construction and general appointments, the new Dawe theatre at State and Lafayettte streets, in the heart of the business section of Bridgeport, Conn., was opened recently.

The $300,000 house has a seating capacity of 1,500—800 on the main floor and 700 in the balcony. It was designed by Charles W. Walker and built by Marsh Brothers, general contractors and engineers. The color scheme of

Dear Sir:

In regard to the letter you printed for me in the Dec. 17 issue of the NEWS, permit me to call your attention to the error you made in omitting the part of my letter telling the proper distance to place the shutter from the lens.

I find that the proper distance and the easiest to adjust is at the point where the ray of light from the lens is the narrowest. By using a blade of the shutter and moving on shaft forward and backward this point can be found. At this place I find the ghost on top and bottom is easily chased away!

Will thank you to publish this for many of the members have written and asked me why I went into the detail without telling the proper distance. I am sure it was just a mistake of the printer, and with very best of wishes to you and all members, believe me,

NATIONAL ANTI-MISFRAME LEAGUE PLEDGE

AS a motion picture operator who has the interest of his profession at heart and is willing to assist in eliminating some of the evils practised in the operating-room, I promise that I will to the best of my ability return films to the exchange in first-class condition. Furthermore, I will when it becomes necessary remedy all misframes, bad patches, etc., that may be in the film which I receive and in this way co-operate with my brother operators and give greater pleasure to those who make up the motion picture audience by showing films that are free from such defects. I also promise that I will not make punch marks in film, and when film is received by me, with punch holes, I will notify the exchange to that effect so that they may use their efforts to correct this evil.

BARTON ORGAN FIVE POINTS THEATRE, CLEVELAND, OHIO

Mr. John Kalafat, Owner Five Points Theatre, Cleveland, Says—

The Barton Organ has beautiful tone quality, the new musical combinations from the divided manual are beautiful almost beyond belief. It certainly is an attraction in the theatre which many of my patrons speak about.

The Barton Organ will be an attraction in your theatre.

Any film will print a shadow and a highlight—it's the tones in between that give the positive its quality.

EASTMAN POSITIVE FILM

Has the long scale of gradation—the reproductive quality that registers all the delicate halftones of the softest or the most brilliant lightings. It carries quality through to the screen.

Eastman Film, both regular and tinted base, is identifiable throughout its entire length by the words "Eastman" "Kodak" stenciled in the film margin.

Have Optimistic Outlook For 1922

Evidence of the fact that the Bell & Howell Company are optimistic of the future is reflected in the large capital outlay which has been made for increased factory facilities, and for new experiments and development work embracing machines and appliances for all branches of the Industry. Contrary to the accepted belief that most manufacturing establishments have had to contend with idleness in the recent depression, the Bell & Howell Company have been unusually busy, and have welcomed an opportunity of getting even with production, which has been heretofore retarded, making only long time deliveries possible. In the near future deliveries of major equipment will be made from stock. The slump in business has really been a welcomed period to the Bell & Howell Company, if for nothing more than what it has enabled them to accomplish in the perfection of tooling methods. It has resulted in their being able to manufacture parts cheaper, and with methods which tend to make possible the interchangeability of all parts and with consequent improved precision and accuracy.

The new developments projected for the coming year—models for which are now completed, or in course of construction—include a new super-step Printer, entirely dissimilar from anything heretofore attempted; it is fully automatic, with provision for any number of light changes from one to infinity. A full line for the amateur and semi-professional—including Camera, Projector, Printers, and other laboratory equipment—has also been perfected, and will be well into production in the early part of 1922.

P. M. Abbott Now with News

Starting this week P. M. Abbott assumes the technical editorship of Motion Picture News. Mr. Abbott is a graduate engineer who has devoted a number of years to the study of the projectionists' problems and to the construction and equipment of motion picture theatres.

A. G. Cruikshank will take over the advertising and service end of the Construction and Equipment section.

Installation and Care of the Organ

always results in a consequent change in the remainder. It must not be supposed for a moment that the action of organ pipes is mysterious and can only be comprehended by a few. Any one who has the necessary musical ear and mechanical brain and hand can quickly learn to make the requisite tonal adjustments which may become necessary. Obviously the chambers should be clean, dry and of an even temperature so as to prevent things going wrong.

A good organ mechanic keeps things right and does not allow things to go wrong and so the organ is always efficient, the organist is enabled to do good work and the public gets its money's worth at a minimum maintenance cost to the owner. A large organ should be inspected at least every two days,—a medium instrument once a week and every theatre organ at least once a month.

Every large city has several independent organ mechanics who are capable of rendering such services, and usually the cost of making frequent short visits to an organ is little more than would be the case were the visits further apart and each one longer. The former plan keeps the organ right and prevents things going wrong and the latter corrects things after they have gone wrong.

First, purchase a good organ.

Second, install it right.

Third, keep it right.

Open Oxford at St. Paul Diamond Theatre

The New Oxford, the largest single floor house in the middle west, was recently opened at St. Paul, Minn. Tom Burke, manager of Midland Films, Inc., and George Grandstrom are associated in the ownership of the theatre. Construction work on the Oxford was started last July.

The house is of red pressed brick and harmonizes with the architectural style of the neighborhood. The building is of fireproof construction and has 10 fire exits. All of its 1,200 seats are on the ground floor, which simplifies greatly the handling of the crowds, and also eliminates the necessity of patrons climbing stairs.

The box office is constructed of Tennessee marble and dark wood. Artistic display windows are provided on either side. A handsomely decorated arch extends the entire length of the front of the building above the ticket office.

The beautiful foyer is separated from the auditorium by a partition curtained with silk. The modern Italian decorative style has been followed throughout the entire house. Amber, mauve and peacock relieved by gold are the colors used in the decorative scheme.

Large dome-like spaces filled with filagree work are to be found at the top on either side of the screen. Cherubs, symbolizing music and art adorn the corners with silken curtains at the sides to emphasize the rich beauty of the interior.

La Vine's Riviera Simplex Equipped

Every now and then, we hear of someone who does something in an unusual way, and which reflects much credit and causes favorable comment on their ability. This is what happened, when on December first, S. C. La Vine opened the beautiful Riviera theatre, St. Johns Place and Kingston avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y., and gave to the Bedford section of Brooklyn a new and finely appointed theatre. The name Riviera was suggested, Mr. La Vine states in his program, by the garden spot of the world—the Riviera—and as one views the theatre he finds that every effort has been put forth to realize the ideal behind it.

The policy among the modern theatres of today of installing three projectors, to insure an uninterrupted performance at all times, has been adopted by the Riviera management. Three of the latest type "S" Simplex motor driven projectors, two sopt lights and a generator are part of the splendid equipment installed in the projection room.

Several organizations of merit—The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and B. F. Keith Vaudeville Circuit have been selected to provide the entertainment that will be presented at the Riviera Theatre.

England Claims Most Beautiful and Artistic Theatre

Recently Opened at Brighton, Costing $2,000,000

Hithertofore we have rested securely confident that no country could approach ours in Motion Picture Theatre design and the general elegance and completeness with which our houses stand forth. However, we must now give consideration to the latest creation of our neighbors across the ocean. Robert Atkinson—considered by many as England's most eminent theatre architect—accompanied by several other noted men in this industry, has favored us by a tour of inspection during which he visited the leading motion picture theatres in this country. Mr. Atkinson, while greatly impressed by our grandeur in theatre construction, claims that the Regent, recently opened in Brighton, England, by the Provincial Cinematograph Theatres, Limited, surpasses all in its artistic beauty and completeness.

In quoting extracts from the pamphlet distributed for the introduction of this theatre, a general impression may be gained of the many commendable features of this house.

"Not only is 'The Regent' a theatre which embodies every modern improvement, both in planning for the convenience of patrons and in the methods employed in its construction, but it is revolutionary in the novelty of its design and decoration. Color, as such, is very seldom employed in theatre decoration, but nowhere more than in buildings dedicated to the public's amusement is it so necessary to create an atmosphere of lightness and carefreeness. At 'The Regent' color, and pure color, is the guiding note.

From whatever angle the building is approached, the exterior presents an imposing appearance. The Queen's Road front is encased with colored marbles and colored panels in terra cotta, and on either flank are resplendent lanterns of Venetian design. The whole building is well proportioned, elegantly simple and symmetrical in design, with stately character as the predominant note in the scheme of architecture.

The marble scheme which begins on the front of the building is continued in the entrance hall, with its attractive dado. Its walls and ceiling are of Caen stone. The brilliant mirrors and rich fittings, arranged with artistic skill, give a decidedly aesthetic effect, which is considerably enhanced by the great antique vases used to carry the lighting. The old period antique white marble candelabra—these, by the way, secured from the famous Hope Collection—which are placed at each side of the main stairway are particularly fine, and will well repay close examination.

The spacious promenades, providing ample freedom of movement, which will be found at the rear of each level of seats, are also a new and pleasing feature in picture-house construction. The wide gangways and staircases, which are divided to assist up and down traffic, are a necessity in a building of this capacity. No fewer than nineteen separate exits have been provided for the safety of the public. By means of these exits and the skill shown in placing them, the entire auditorium can be emptied at a normal rate in less than three minutes.

In this connection it may be added that the entire building is constructed of fireproof materials. The projection room is absolutely fireproof and replete with all the latest improvements in machinery.

The Box Foyer is a bizarre series of vaulted and domed chambers serving the two-fold purpose of a corridor and a tea room, connecting directly with the box seats in the theatre and practically on a level with the street. The decoration here is whimsical in character, unquestionably original, but in whichever direction the eye roams good taste will claim its full measure of appreciation. Everything here is of so quaint a character that one hardly needs to be told that the scheme itself sprang from the mind of a true artist and thats craftsmen's hands of more than ordinary skill gave it definite shape. As a meeting place for friends before and after the performances, this section will soon become well known, and once known, much frequented.

From the Box Foyer the three great allegorical pictures of "Carnival" by Walter Bayes may be seen.

The plan of the Auditorium is the latest fan-shape type, employed in the most modern theatres, and which gives a perfect sight-line from every seat in the theatre. There are no pillars to obstruct the view. The balcony, constructed entirely of steel, is the largest theatre balcony in the Kingdom. It has a clear span of 110 feet and a projection of over 50 feet, a feat of no small engineering skill on the part of Dr. Oscar Faber, O.B.E., the consulting engineer. The auditorium itself, in which nearly 3000 people can be comfortably seated, has many strikingly beautiful and noteworthy features. The general color scheme, principally yellow and orange, gives beauty, brightness and liveli-

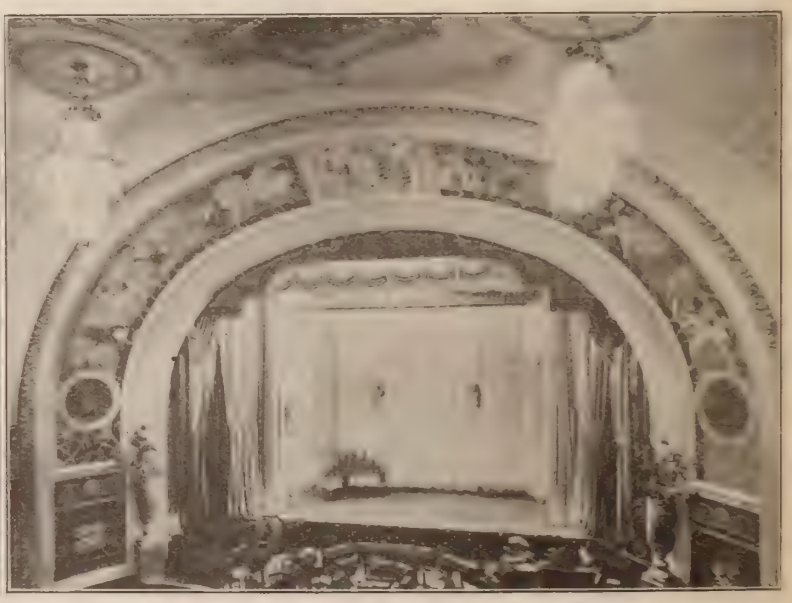
Criticism Valuable



Would it not be profitable for us to listen attentively to the criticisms by England's leading theatre men? Do our houses give a general impression of glitter and show? When we spend millions of dollars on some theatre designed to be second to none, do those millions bring forth real artist beauty, cheerfulness, good taste and character?

More and more the first class Motion Picture theatre must cater to a discriminating public, the people that appreciate real art and will show their appreciation by patronage. We tire of plain show, but the more often we gaze upon beauty the stronger its attraction.

"The Regent" is apparently luxuriant and at the same time artistic. Its total cost was slightly under $2,000,000; however, with which sum, which represents less than one-half our maximum expenditure, a theatre was designed and constructed which is now held forth as the leader of the world.

Paramount Condensers Proving Successful

Reports from various sources indicate that the imported Paramount condenser lenses, which have only recently been placed in use here in this country, are giving very satisfactory service. A thorough test of the practicability of these condensers has been their continued use in the Rialto, Criterion and Rivoli theatres, Broadway, New York. Mr. Harry Ruben, chief projectionist of this circuit, states that he has found these lenses superior to any previously tried under his supervision.

It appears that the superior merits of these condensers lie in the fact that they are ground and polished and are also made of high grade glass. When care is taken in finishing condenser lenses, it is possible to secure less loss of light through surface reflection and, in some cases, spherical aberration. It seems logical then that these imported condensers should prove more satisfactory than the ordinary pressed condensers.

S. S. Cassard Distributor

S. S. "Dick" Cassard has taken over the sole distributorship of the Baird Motion Picture projector. Mr. Cassard will build up an organization of distributors throughout the United States and Canada. In turn these distributors will appoint dealers.

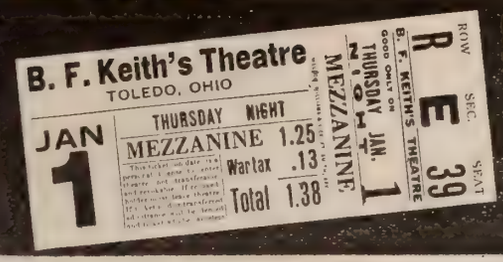
Announcement of Mr. Cassard's appointment came after a series of conferences between President Emory, Secretary Ruth, of the Baird Motion Picture Machine Co. of Newark, and Mr. Cassard.

"I am going to have 'dealers,'" Mr. Cassard said, "but they will be analogous to the organizations that are now misnamed 'distributors' by the other manufacturers. I shall make no change in territories which are now being properly covered by a competent dealer. Rather, it will be my idea to give real assistance to the dealer so that he will redouble his efforts. My office will temporarily be at 839 East Nineteenth street, Brooklyn."

Mr. Cassard became associated with the Nicholas Power Company about nine years ago. On Nov. 1 of this year he decided to enter the portable field. Not feeling free to do so he resigned his position with the Powers company. When this news reached the Baird company, Mr. Cassard's appointment followed.

Bonham, Tex., Opens

Construction of the R. & R. American theatre at Bonham, Tex., was novel in that it is possible in a small town to erect a house with all the material furnished by local men. The American was nearly entirely Bonham constructed. The house is 50 feet wide, two and one-half stories high. The interior is furnished in old ivory, with white walls, mahogany woodwork and ultramarine blue draperies.



The projection room is 12 by 16 ft. with high ceiling. The resistance devices are located in a separate room. The ports are arranged so that spot lights and animated prologues can be handled without interfering with the projectors.

Philadelphia House Opens

The newest picture house opened in Philadelphia is the Sixty-ninth Street theatre situated in a new settlement at the extreme end of West Philadelphia, right opposite the Sixty-ninth street terminal, and just on the edge of several new suburbs which are growing rapidly. The place is on the ground floor of one of the largest apartment houses of the city. It is very large and the decorations are very conservative but beautiful. An elaborate heating system and ventilating system has been installed insuring the comfort and health of the patrons. Everything about the projection room is up to date and the best obtainable. Lawlor and Company are the architects. The house is giving the first run in West Philadelphia of the big pictures by arrangement with Jules Mastbaum, head of the Stanley company. The musical features are also an important part of their programs.

Reserved Seat Tickets for BIG PICTURES

There are a great many really big productions available today by exhibitors. These are productions that in the past would have been road shows, either not playing your town or playing the opposition combination house. You can give these special productions the proper presentation right in your own theatre. The secret is RESERVED SEATS. "The Birth of a Nation," "'Way Down East," "The Four Horsemen," "Over the Hill," "The Old Nest," and many other unusually big pictures must be played with reserved seats. They are too long for a grind show. They must be presented at advanced prices, and be put on in real showmanship manner. Are you able to handle the big pictures? The Reserved seat policy will make for success.

Advise us your seating capacity and we will be glad to quote you prices and send you samples.

Beautiful Theatre

The stage effects are produced by an entirely new and elaborate system of multi-colored lights worked from side galleries, and capable of giving to each story as it is presented a distinctive and appropriate setting suitably expressed in color. Light and color will play new and important parts in Regent Picture House presentations, thereby adding immeasurably to the beauty and dramatic power of the productions screened for the amusement and delight of patrons.

The orchestra, with its seating capacity of 60 performers, is so arranged that when a large stage is required it can be practically covered over and a stage of the usual dimensions secured.

The main foyer, leading to the North street entrance is very simply vaulted and relies largely on generous proportions for its effect. The color scheme is much more subdued than in the great Auditorium, and so gains value and effectiveness by contrast. The Ship Cage, which leads off the Main Foyer, is a free rendering of the Ward Room of an eighteenth century three-decker in all the glory of its pristine magnificence, without the "press-gang" and the "rope-end" as an accompaniment. Here is a room so unusually original in conception, so homelike in the luxurious ease of its furnishings, so warm and cheerful in tone and coloring, it is safe to assume that from the earliest days it will rank high in the favor of "The Regent's" patrons. The Ship Cafe will be open to the public (irrespective of whether a visit is paid to the theatre) from 10 a. m. to 11 p. m. daily. All kinds of refreshments and meals will be daintily and quickly served at moderate prices, and licensed beverages will be obtainable. Mr. Louis Lewis' orchestra will give a program of music in the "Ship" every afternoon.

The Restaurant on the first floor, on a level with the Balcony Foyer and overlooking the Queens Road, is decorated in the manner of the Italian Renaissance of the sixteenth century, when Italian art was at its zenith. The ceiling is richly coffered, colored, and gilded, and the walls hung with plain saffron colored hangings. The furnishings and equipment of this room are on a most lavish scale. It is the determination of the management to make "The Regent" Restaurant a place in which the pleasure of dining with friends will be heightened by an atmosphere of genuine hospitality, good cheer, and an unexcelled service.

It is interesting to note that including the theatre, winter gardens, restaurants, cafes and staff rooms, the building has accommodation for nearly 4,000 people. A staff of 300 people will be regularly employed.

In every respect the programmes will be as complete, as attractive, as up-to-date and as comprehensive as at the New Gallery Kinema in Regent street, London, and other big theatres under this company's control, many of which are well known to Brighton's visitors.

Open Grand View, Vancouver

The Grandview theatre has been opened by Thomas Shiels on Commercial Drive, Vancouver, B. C., replacing an older theatre of the same name which was operated by Mr. Shiels for many years. The seating capacity of the new theatre is 900 which is exactly double that of the former structure. It is of brick and tile construction, 55 by 105 feet in dimensions, with a front faced with tapestry brick and stone trimmings. It was designed by Architect H. H. Simonds.—GLADISH.

"A Movie Trip Through Filmland"

(Industrial Short Length)

DO your neighborhood patrons often ask questions regarding making of pictures that you are not sufficiently informed to answer? Are they interested in the commercial product, film, negative and positive, responsible for the motion pictures they see on the screen? Then, show them "A Movie Trip Through Filmland," answer all their inquiries and entertain them at the same time.

This informative reel radiates information. It begins with showing film in the making, process through which the cotton must go, then the working of nitric acid on silver, the combined ingredients, and the application of the "dope," properly known as emulsion, finally the film ready for use in the movie studio.

Then the "shooting" is shown, the camera man high in the air, in order to be able to get the proper focus for the subject he is photographing. Follows, footage illustrating the results. It is not about movie folk nor does it tell the secrets of making pictures. Instead, it educates the uninformed as to how it is possible to get the effects we sometimes see on the screen. Decidedly interesting.—LILLIAN R. GALE.

"The Yellow Streak"

(Cyclone Smith Series—Universal)

EDDIE POLO proves to the satisfaction of his fellow-workers in the plot of latest opus written around the Cyclone Smith Series of Westerns that he is not streaked with the yellow color. That is what this picture proceeds to prove. That is the plot in a nutshell. "The Yellow Streak" is the fourth of the Series and tells of the picturesque Westerner who saves the girl in a runaway and finds a job on a ranch. Merely because he is good-natured or slow to register anger, the boys have amusement with him. And because he takes their pranks without any display of anger they accuse him of possessing a yellow streak. The action pilots him through some true-to-form incident with plenty of gun-play, riding, kidnapping, rescuing and what not. The ingredients are all there and running neck and neck for the honors. The hero pursues the horse thieves, captures them and rescues the girl. A shappy enough Western and up with the rest of the Cyclone Smith documents.—Length 2 reels.—LAURENCE REID.

"Unknown Switzerland"

(Bruce Scenic—Educational)

THE traveler, the reader or spectator is never tired of taking a journey to Switzerland. This wonder-spot of Europe has been described in illustrated form and through charming word pictures. Scenic artists have brought it out on the silver-sheet a score of times, but it offers so many varied and truly picturesque backgrounds that the field is limitless. There are always enough vistas around the bend of a river or beyond a towering mountain or alongside of some Alpine hut—that it always seems like virgin territory that is being explored.

Robert Bruce has taken his time in collecting as enchanting a series of views as has ever been recorded. He has scaled glacier streams, caught huge vistas from towering crags, and taken the spectator on a jaunt, the beauty of which must be seen to be appreciated. Truly it is an unknown country. For no single journey can record its magnificent impressions. The long shots are richly eloquent. And the photography, always a feature of a Bruce scenic, is exceptionally well tinted and as clear as crystal. The picture conquers one with its old-world atmosphere and the handiwork of nature.—Length, One Reel.—LAURENCE REID.

"Rolling Stones"

(Mermaid Comedy—Educational)

THIS comedy contains a full share of ridiculous hokum, so ingenious in its way, that there is no gainsaying the fact that it records a deal of humor. Lloyd Hamilton, who is adept at playing the simpleton, has a great time in carrying on a masquerade party of his own. He is up to various tricks which gather force and which spell amusement even though there is no semblance of plot visible. The comedian is "in cahoots" with the heroine, who takes a job as "come-on" agent in a men's hat store. The juvenile is perched upon an awning. His duty is to knock off the hats of the various masculine pedestrians that saunter by. What becomes of the head-pieces? Well Hamilton is guiding a steam roller up and down the asphalt and flattens out the various designs so that they are unable to be worn again. Hence the wearer is forced to go to the shop and purchase a new one.

The idea runs its length and the star is next seen entering a restaurant. He has secreted the boy in his great coat, so that he resembles a short ton of coal. And as he looks over the dishes on the counter, the boy's hands being near the pastries and things, picks them up—dishes et al—and stores them away. Hamilton hangs up the coat and when the dishes tumble down and break the proprietor discovers the boy hidden in the folds. It is exaggerated tomfoolery that is offered in "Rolling Stones." The star offers moments in a hall-bedroom when he is avoiding his rent, and scores over several unique incidents.—Length 2 Reels.—LAURENCE REID.

"The Chauffeur"

(Clyde Cook Comedy—Fox)

WHETHER it is as a guide, sailor, huntsman, toreador or chauffeur, it makes no difference to Clyde Cook. This able pantomimist, whose comic expression knows no limit in his ability to burlesque various trades and occupations, has scored another ten-strike with "The Chauffeur." The comedian is taking up the lowly professions just at present. He is satirizing the servant class. Those who belong to the white-collar gentry may have occasion to duck their heads, when he assumes their identities. He gives indications that no profession or occupation might be sacred. He could find humor by putting on the cloth peculiar to the clergy and getting away with it. And there would probably be no indictment of the burlesque. He does not wear the same trick suit or suspenders. He actually adopts the livery of the type he is portraying. Which is further indication that he is a comedian of the first order.

With his new comedy he has a lot of fun with a trick car which is balky. He is unable to inspire passengers to ride in the vehicle because he has a desperate rival. The customers are either walking the other way or being victimized in riding with the opposition. The wheels of the car are full of tricks because he can guide them to run horizontal with the cross-town traffic. The plot finally reaches the denouement which details the grand chase of the enemy taxi-driver with Cook as the victim. Over fences—in and out of buildings, rooms, doors, windows, vats, barrels and what not—the two chauffeurs take up the pursuit. Finally the star discovers that he is up against a grand kleegle of some sort, for they are preparing tar and feathers for him. He escapes and doubles in brass as a rooster. A black boy is endeavoring in one scene to chop his head off, thinking him an over-fed chicken. But Cook is caught after all in a vat of tar as he makes a second-story jump for safety. The comedy is filled with invention and humor. In only one or two places does it become repetitious or indicates that the gag has been used before.—Length, 2 Reels.—LAURENCE REID.

Advance Feature Review

"Vendetta"

(Howells—Commonwealth—5 Reels)

ON the heels of such successful pictures as have made the name of Pola Negri indicative of productions worthy of embodying the fine acting with which the star is credited, it is regrettable she is now presented in an inferior offering. Unfortunately, there is little to say in favor of "Vendetta," aside from some pleasing photography.

The direction would seem mostly at fault, although the glaring absence of continuity, absolute disregard for logic and abstract attention to detail may have their bearing on the failure of the picture to hit the average mark.

Do not confuse this "Vendetta" with the story originally made famous by Marie Corelli's novel. They are not related. This picture tells of a young Corsican woman, whose villainous guardian endeavors to force her hand in marriage. She does not respond and it happens in the course of events she falls in love with an English officer, whose name she does not know. He escapes death as a result of her nursing through a fever, an epidemic in which the girl and her unworthy guardian are quarantined. They are upon the trail of "Vendetta," sworn by the sister of a man who purposely instigated a quarrel with a splendid English fellow, then challenged him to a duel, with a view to killing the innocent Britisher. Instead, he got his own medicine, just before the sister appeared on the scene in hope of diverting the tragedy. Account her brother's death, she swears to avenge him, and it develops the young Englishman she is in love with is the man she is looking for. Two unlikely villains plan to see her married to him, then inform her of his identity. Follows an attempt at dramatic climax, which develops only in an expected ending.—LILLIAN R. GALE.

"THE LITTLE MINISTER"
(Vitagraph)

Excellent Production Made From Barrie's Classic

JAMES M. BARRIE'S celebrated story (not the play) has been made into a feature production by Vitagraph, and it behooves every exhibitor to book it because of its excellent qualities. Some of those who have been showmen over a score of years will doubtless remember the three-reeler which Vitagraph made from the same story. With the advance in technical equipment—with an advance in the art of translating a story for the screen, the producers have done extremely well by this charming document which is entitled to classical honors. The lovable figure of Lady Babbie, the quaint character of Gavin Dishart, the little minister, and the picturesque natives of Thrums—these are all given life and color here.

Not even the stickler for truths will be able to find any flaw in this production. From a technical viewpoint, the offering is richly decorated. The thatched cottages, the simple interiors, the charming backgrounds—these are all caught. You become an actual participant in this fragrant story of old-world sentiment and romance. You follow the adventure of Gavin with the deepest interest, even though you have been made familiar with the plot through the story or play. It carries the deepest sort of heart interest. There is sympathy for nearly every character. And when the soldiers surround the little village in order to compel the simple weavers to obey the laws of the country, you are stimulated with desire to be with them and help them in some way. The minister tells the natives to find a way to peace. But they rebel because of the insistent demands of the "gypsy girl," Babbie, who eventually proves to be the ward of a neighborly baron.

There is rich incident offered when Gavin upbraids the wicked Rob Dow during church services. And you almost catch the spiritual inspiration as the young preacher finds a champion in his tormentor. The story revolves around this little circular town of Thrums. The walls are penetrated and you see a simple folk, deeply religious and eager to live their lives in their own way. It is a charming moment when Lady Babbie runs to the home of Nannie to discover whether her beloved is dead. She is betrothed to her guardian, but she willingly elopes with the minister, and they are married according to gypsy rituals—there being a gypsy camp nearby. The subsequent scene flashes the only dramatic note, as Gavin jumps into a turbulent stream to rescue the disappointed baron. They are hopelessly doomed, but the dominant figure of Rob Gow rescues them, though he sacrifices his life. The rainstorm is eloquently portrayed.

In all it is a picture which conquers with its simplicity and charm and romance. The acting of Alice Calhoun is fragrant with naivete and sentiment. It is her finest role in her finest picture. James Morrison is splendid as the minister, and the others are conspicuous with well-rounded character sketches.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

James M. Barrie's celebrated story, "The Little Minister," which has been popular for many years and which is entitled to be called a classic, has become a motion picture. Vitagraph has adapted the story for the screen and with the charming Alice Calhoun as Lady Babbie, the picture takes on an appeal which is irresistible. "The Little Minister," which unfolds the gentle and charming life of the village of Thrums in Scotland, will appear at the ———— theatre next ————. It is a story which carries a tremendous heart interest, as well as quaint characterization and romance and sentiment.

The Little Minister does not respond to the "gypsy girl" but her beauty and charm win him over eventually. The play takes up in appealing fashion the fancies and dreams of the heroine, Lady Babbie, who falls in love with the minister of the Auld Lict Kirk and gives up her wedding preparations in order to be near him. Miss Calhoun gives the picture a fragrant appeal and her support includes the dependable James Morrison as well as a host of others. The backgrounds are quaint and picturesque.

PROGRAM READER

Everyone has read or seen "The Little Minister," James M. Barrie's celebrated classic. This vital story which has never grown old—which still carries a power of persuasion through its tremendous heart interest and its simple romance and sentiment of Scottish life takes on a form here which will attract old and young alike. It is a picture which offers the spectator a dramatic treat and acquaints him with the simple attributes of life in Scotland. The picture is an adaptation of Barrie's celebrated story. It will be presented at the ———— theatre next ———— with Alice Calhoun in the lovable character of Lady Rabbie and James Morrison as the little minister of the Auld Lict Kirk.

CATCH LINES

The most charming story of a decade ago and one of the most appealing stories ever written. That is "The Little Minister." As a picture it appears at the ———— theatre next ———— with Alice Calhoun as the star.

"EDEN AND RETURN"
(Hunt Stromberg-R-C Pictures)

Frail Little Comedy Has Some Amusing Moments

THIS polite comedy is all about an irrepressible girl of wealthy parents who is determined to defy her father in matters of romance and have her own way in selecting a proper mate for a husband. This is an old established pattern and has been used in serious pieces, farce-comedies and even those of the slapstick brand. It is so frail that extending it through feature length shows up its limitations of plot and incident. However, the idea carries enough substance or else it would not have been employed so extensively the past few years. It is the direction which shows up the shortcomings, for repetitious detail and incidents which cannot be called funny have been exploited time and again.

The heroine is charming and gay and vivacious. Into her life enters three suitors—three of the orthodox brand, who must be dressed and who must act in simple fashion. They always appear together and when the winsome coquette challenges them with a saucy look or word, they immediately assume moon-calf expressions and scamper about.. The picture is prettily staged and the atmosphere of refinement is splendidly caught. Furthermore the quality of farce is easily put over through an adequate array of subtitles. When the real hero intrudes the picture takes on more spark. However, the manner of his introduction is not humorous even though it is unique.

A flash is given of him driving a hearse up New York's Fifth avenue, the object being to bury the city. This form of ridicule seems rather farfetched. He has spent his snug fortune, but when the girl spies him she realizes that he is the man for her despite his lack of money. Her father does not encourage the two lovers. He would have the youth show some signs of regaining his wealth before he will grant his consent. The young man takes the tips which are written on the cuffs of the father's shirts and plays the market for big gains. The young sweethearts have eloped and are presiding over a modest apartment. The hero operates from the kitchen in accumulating his wealth. In the end the father is ready to admit that his son-in-law knows how to provide for a wife. So he forgives and adds his blessing. The title has its meaning in the honeymoon resort. It is mostly an "interior" picture which is likely to get over in certain quarters—probably where there is a younger set dominant. There is very little originality and very little humor, but it manages to charm on several occasions principally through the delightful performance of Doris May. It is well lighted and the players are costumed with a suggestion of refinement and wealth. In our opinion it is not up to "The Foolish Age."—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Betty Baylock	Doris May
Robert Baylock	Emmett King
Connie Demarest	Margaret Livingston

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Doris May, who made such a favorable impression in "The Foolish Age," in which she represented a modern girl of ideas, comes forward in her latest release entitled "Eden and Return," which appears at the ———— theatre next ————. The role assumed by the fragrant star is that of a young society girl who is determined to have her own way in matters of romance. She has a bevy of suitors, but the ideal lover does not come into her life until she happens to read of a very jaded young man who has buried New York.

In an escape from his creditors he enters her life. And the love spark is caught immediately. The youth is financially embarrassed and her father will not encourage him until he proves that he can make a snug fortune within a stipulated time. This he does by taking the tips which the father wrote upon his shirt cuffs and playing the market for big gains. The picture is a pleasant little satire filled with romance and sentiment and humor and it is also capably interpreted by a well balanced cast.

PROGRAM READER

Poor Betty! She could not have her own way. "I've picked three men for you. Take your choice, but marry one you must," thundered her father. But just at this exciting moment Betty met the REAL MAN of her life. He was the wildest man ever turned loose in New York. He hadn't a cent, but they married and ran away to Eden. Then papa became provoked. He told his charming, but determined daughter that he would not countenance such a desperate act upon her part. Her husband must show the way to wealth. How he did it fills one of the happy moments in "Eden and Return," which comes to the ———— theatre next ————. A sparkling, delicious comedy. See "Eden and Return" with Doris May.

SUGGESTIONS

This picture suggests a snappy line of comedy exploitation. Fill your program readers, throwaways, and newspaper paragraphs with humorous copy—tinctured with a touch of jazz. Make it snappy above everything else. If you booked "The Fooolish Age," your crowd will be responsive toward Miss May. Tell them that she has a sparkling and humorous picture in "Eden and Return." Ask a series of pertinent questions of your patrons—particularly the younger feminine set. Bill it as a delicious comedy of an independent girl who defied her father and married the man of her choice. Mention that Earle Metcalfe is in the cast as leading man. Use snappy catch lines.

CATCH LINES

Men! Beware! Do not write tips from the stock market on the cuffs of your shirt. It may lead to your downfall and may make someone else rich at your expense. See "Eden and Return."

"STAR DUST"
(First National)

Splendid Comedy-Drama—Excellently Constructed

RISING, like the Wapsipinicon River, headed due east and flowing through a village of the "Hawkeye" State, "Star Dust" commences to shine in a small town the author has named "Paradise." Its successful terminal is Broadway.

From Paradise to New York travels an unhappy bride. The course of happenings closely connected with her life, beginning with her early childhood and ending with the zenith of her ambitions achieved, go to make up the delightful photoplay, designed especially to bring the versatile abilities of a comparatively new star, to the foreground. In viewing "Star Dust," it is interesting to note that it is but the fourth picture in which Hope Hampton has appeared in the leading feminine role. In "Star Dust" she has been given an opportunity to command recognition and to score in a difficult undertaking. Her improvement over anything she has ever done is most emphatic.

Obviously, in the construction of "Star Dust," no expense has been spared. It required costly sets, an unusual number of interiors necessitating accurate detail, the consideration of which register noticeably. The cast are to be congratulated upon excellent interpretations of their several roles. Indeed, the "types" are artistic characterizations, which could not be improved upon. Superiority of the photography earns commendation. A completely satisfactory production is "Star Dust." Anthony Paul Kelly can write the kind of scenarios that makes them.

Rural comedy-drama describes it. The story of the daughter of an unfeeling mother and adoring father. All her young life, the girl is restrained from doing the things she likes most. And her tastes are elevated. Her great passion is music. It is known that she can sing.

When very young, a despicable young fellow who has always wanted Lily Becker, plays a winning card. Lily's father owes his father money. Account of this Lily makes a silent sacrifice. The wedding takes places.

Patiently enduring mental torture, Lily is obliged to live in the home with her husband's fiendishly jealous mother. The parting of ways finally occasions Lily's departure from "Paradise." A long struggle intervenes, the most shattering blow, when she loses her baby. Following an attempt at suicide, she enjoys the acquaintance of a young man who was once a "down and outer." His encouraging assistance and the coincidental meeting with a great Italian master of vocal cultivation, lays the foundation for Lily's ultimate success.

Among the highlights—the scene of the wedding, close-ups of Miss Hampton being exceedingly beautiful, and the train wreck which eliminates the masculine obstacle so that there may come a happy ending. —Length, 6 reels.—Lillian R. Gale.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

In "Star Dust," latest starring vehicle for beautiful Hope Hampton, important parts aside from the leading role, are artistically portrayed by some standard screen favorites. For instance, James Rennie, recently distinguished by appearing in consecutive successes, aside from having become the husband of Dorothy Gish; Vivia Ogden, who characterized the "gossip" in "Way Down East;" Noel Tearle, the meanest of the grown sons in "Over the Hill;" Edna Ross, Thomas Maguire, Mrs. Mary Foy, Charles Mussett, Ashley Buck, George Humbert, Gladys Wilson and Charles Wellsley. "Star Dust," a First National attraction, will be featured at the ———— on ————. Comedy-drama de luxe!

PROGRAM READER

Hope Hampton, rapidly advancing as a favorite film star, will be seen next in "Star Dust," which will be the featured photoplay on ————. Aside from having surrounded herself with an adequate cast, Miss Hampton is said by New York critics to have marvellously improved in her work since her screen debut, only a short time ago. "Star Dust" is her fourth starring vehicle, and the production she admits is nearing the goal she intended to reach when she determined to become a screen actress. While suggested by Fanny Hurst's novel of the same name, the photoplay was written by Anthony Paul Kelly, acknowledged playwright and scenarist of ability. It was Mr. Kelly who wrote "Three Faces East," the most popular play on Broadway during the war, and who wrote the screen version of "Way Down East." You can readily see why "Star Dust" is scheduled for the attraction at the ———— theatre on ————.

CATCH LINES

Lily Becker lived in "Paradise"—Iowa. She went from Paradise to New York. Her idea of "Paradise" was "Broadway." Did she find it so? "Star Dust" will tell.

"FIFTY CANDLES"
(Willat-Hodkinson)

Mystery Melodrama Teeming With Suspense

MELODRAMA, the Irvin V. Willat production, "Fifty Candles," proves beyond a doubt, need not be "old timey" in order to contain the same thrills, excitement and intensity which marked the cheaper class of spoken drama twenty years ago. Especially when incorporated in a thoroughly modern constructed photoplay. "Fifty Candles" is melodrama, unadulterated, but equally rejuvenated, veneered with some extremely artistic touches, making as good photoplay of the kind as is usually seen. It embodies the same sort of mystery plot development as was identified with such old popular plays as "Across the Pacific," when melodrama bordered upon tragedy, but came out smiling with a "kick" at the finish.

Do not get an idea from the title that "Fifty Candles" is a story of what happened on mother's fiftieth birthday, or that it refers to a golden wedding, expecting sweet, rural atmosphere, else your patrons will be disappointed. But, if they like substantial melodrama, enjoy being mystified, let "Fifty Candles" light your theatre entrance in incandescents; it is bound to ignite favorable comment.

The direction is adequate; the cast of exceptional merit. There are some novel effects in the way of photography, after the picture proper gets a good start. It is hampered in the beginning with some attempted effects that are not worthy of the balance.

The story is adapted from Earl Derr Bigger's novel of Saturday Evening Post circulation. It hinges upon the life of a Chinese philosopher, evidently of noble birth, who is about to be deported, having failed in an attempt to prove himself of American birth. The fault lies with his attorney, who is not in good standing with Honolulu politicians. An American millionaire, with interests in the tropics, offers to substitute the Chinaman for one who died in his service, en voyage. The unfortunate Oriental agrees, in reciprocation, to act as a servant for twenty years. At the end of the alloted time, he extracts payment in full from his master for having interfered in the loyal servant's romance, and for the humiliation he has been obliged to undergo. There is sufficient love interest for those who demand it, yet the intensity of the melodramatic incidents and Oriental intrigue are more responsible for the Hodkinson success.—Length, six reels.—Lillian R. Gale.

THE CAST

Mary-Will Telifair	Marjorie Daw
Hung Chin Chung	Bertram Grassby
Mah Li	Dorothy Sibley
Ralph Coolidge	Edward Burns
Dr. Parker	George Webb
Henry Drew, the father	William Carroll
Mark Drew, the son	Wade Boteler
Carlotta Drew	Ruth King

Directed by Irvin V. Willat.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Fifty Candles" is the thrilling, intense melodramatic offering, the screen version of Earl Derr Bigger's popular novel of Saturday Evening Post fame, which comes to the ———— on ————. It is essentially a mystery story, in which suspense plays an interesting part. The surprise finish is a "knock out." It concerns a Chinese philosopher, upon whose head is a price should he be obliged to return to China from Honolulu. The law decides against him, he is scheduled for deportation, and saved by becoming a slave for twenty years to a rich, though unscrupulous American millionaire. When he is fifty, the rich man gives a birthday party in honor of the slave. Then the loyal Chinese, liberated from his obligation extracts revenge. Bertram Grassby, well known actor with a mustache, appears as the "Chink," smoothly shaven. You have never seen him in this sort of role. Critics claim it is the best work of his career.

PROGRAM READER

Suppose you were American born, of foreign parents, yet unable to prove your place of birth, and ordered deported to a country where a price hung over your head, would you rather humiliate yourself to become a rich man's servant for twenty years and live, or face death at your destination? In "Fifty Candles," a philosopher of noble birth, though Chinese parents, is unable to prove his right to remain in American territory. Sentenced to be deported, he faces the choice described. The story of what happens when his time is up, is what makes "Fifty Candles" one of the most interesting photoplays ever booked in the ————. It will be the featured attraction on ————. Don't miss the screen version of Earl Derr Bigger's most sensational success, which ran in the Saturday Evening Post, entitled "Fifty Candles."

SUGGESTIONS

You may safely exploit a superb cast, and appeal largely to lovers of melodrama. Do not represent "Fifty Candles" as being anything else, but it is mystifying, thrilling and intense melodrama, akin to tragedy. It incldes scenic value, the first of the story being of Honolulu locale, the latter the residential district of San Francisco. A Chinaman is the hero. He faces difficult problems with characteristic Chinese determination and loyalty, but when his obligations are finished, he acts also according to his determinations, which are based upon revenge, and most disastrous for his enemies.

CATCH LINES

Could you PROVE that YOU were born in America, if you had enemies intent upon your deportation to a foreign country?

"MISS LULU BETT"
(William de Mille-Paramount)

Splendid Picture Made From Prize Play

THIS story by Zona Gale, considered one of the most human documents of the past decade, and which won the prize as being the most meritorious play of the past season in New York, has reached the screen with wonderful fidelity—thanks to William De Mille. The champions of this book and play (and they are legion) cannot carp over this treatment of their favorite story. The director has demonstrated further that he is almost in a class by himself when it comes to visualizing the simple, human document. He has humanized the figures of the book so that they stand out like cameos. It is one of the finest adaptations in the history of the photoplay.

It is more faithful than the play, and the director has adhered strictly to the written word. He has emphasized the tragedy of the love-starved girl who has allowed herself to become a drudge through an inferiority complex that prevented her from demonstrating any personality. She is a meek spirit, yet she rebels eventually. The spectator sympathizes with her. He wishes that she would find her true sphere; he wishes that she would teach her arrogant brother-in-law his place. All of this De Mille has caught accurately, charmingly, humanly and eloquently. The kitchen drudge does not know how to dress. She is a woman without any semblance of charm—not even when she elopes with a traveling man and goes to the city. A honeymoon does not change her for she is not blessed with observation.

Miss Gale's book is saturated with life-like attitudes. It is a slice of American family life. The story and characters and incident will be appreciated by everyone. For there is no spectator who does not know a similarly placed woman up the street or around the corner or perhaps in his own home. The little intimate details are finely imagined and executed. Mr. De Mille will have Clara Beranger to thank for a scenario that is in every way faithful and real. It is compact in every scene and incident. Here is screen drama finely suggested. The mere pull of a window shade, the gesture of an uplifted hand, the stubborn attitude of Grandma Bett, the shame of being married to a bigamist on the part of Lulu Bett—these are all intact. It is an old-fashioned home depicted here and it is peopled with old-fashioned figures. Lois Wilson is the wisest selection possible for the title role. She enables you to catch the pathos—the deep, dumb pathos of her life with an expression that is well nigh perfect. Milton Sills plays the young school teacher, who brings a ray of happiness into Lulu's life—and plays the role in his customary presuasive style. Theodore Roberts enacts the arrogant brother-in-law with considerable gusto. He provides the humorous touches. The picture is deserving of special booking and exploitation. Perhaps it is too real—too human to succeed as a great box office magnet.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A motion picture adaptation has been made from the prize play of 1920-21, "Miss Lulu Bett," and it will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ————. This production, the work of William de Mille, may be said to be a faithful adaptation, in that it records the identical characters, incidents and action of the book and play. It is a simple exposition of small town life with the central character a maiden relative who allows herself to become a drudge merely because she does not think herself sufficiently attractive to lift herself from such an environment..

Romance comes to her very suddenly and she elopes with a traveling salesman, with whom she lives for a short time. She discovers him to be a bigamist and returns home to take up her duties as a drudge. But the spirit, so subdued, finally rebels and she finds happiness. Lulu Bett saves her sister-in-law from anxiety and also another girl from a hasty elopement. She is ever ready to assume the blame through her charity and love. The picture is finely staged and acted with authority by Lois Wilson, Theodore Roberts, Milton Sills and others.

PROGRAM READER

Zona Gale's great novel and play, which won the prize as being the best attraction on Broadway the past season is now a film sensation. It presents a slice of American family life which is genuine—which is rich in human character and incident. "Miss Lulu Bett," the fine production, is coming to the ———— theatre next ———— with a cast that includes Lois Wilson, Mabel Van Buren, Milton Sills, Theodore Roberts and others. It is a William de Mille production. It tells the story of a woman who thirsted for love and whose nature had always been starved. Come and see what she did to win happiness. Come and see the most human play of a decade. Remember the date.

SUGGESTIONS

Here you have the facts to exploit. State that the picture as a play won the prize for being the finest thing of the past year. Tell that as a picture it is sure to win the attention of everyone. Detail that it presents the story of a woman who lived the life of a drudge, merely because she was oppressed by family duties. Make mention that she thirsted for love and that her nature had always been starved. Then mention that she found happiness in her own way. The cast is a clever one and the names of the company should be exploited. Everyone is familiar with Milton Sills, Lois Wilson and Theodore Roberts. Feature their names. Link up with your book-dealer for a sale on the book. Describe it as the play that half of New York saw and talked about.

"WHAT NO MAN KNOWS"
(Harry Garson-Equity-State Rights)

Clara Kimball Young Displays Her Talent in Heart Interest Story

THE exhibitor who plays this feature is presenting his patrons with a first rate heart interest story in which the central character is a newspaper woman whose mission is to act the Lady Bountiful in order that starving children may have food and happiness. While this is the theme—the general outline of the picture—it is balanced with one or two counterplots having to do with the eternal triangle—the rescuing of figures in distress and the power of deep, abiding love. Miss Young has occasion to display her emotional talent for the role calls upon her to show a wide expression toward radiating happiness and bringing order out of chaos.

The forepart of the story features a wife of a successful lawyer—the woman being a kleptomaniac who is arrested and convicted of theft despite the influence of her husband. She is painted in selfish colors as a creature of little moral fibre. Her constant demands upon her husband's purse-strings causes him to despair of happiness. It is as a derelict that the woman who had brought the first love into his life rescues him and places him back on his feet. The drama is filled with dramatic moments which features incident pertaining to the night life of the city represented. It also has its humorous moments which are exploited in the "busy-body" attitude of a couple of spinsters who are constantly finding wickedness in every word and act of their neighbors. The heroine is residing in the same apartment house and when they notice her in company with the lawyer they start their vicious crusade which culminates in orphange officials taking the adopted child away from the Lady Bountiful.

The drama also presents the inner family life of the lawyer. His wife returns from prison with no transformation of character. She turns the house into a jazz parlor and cultivates vicious friends. The husband feels helpless to secure a divorce until the woman, unable to stop her thefts, is caught again. Thus he gains the whip-hand and is able to have his freedom so that he may marry the girl of his ideals. The picture is always easy to follow in spite of the varied threads and entanglements of the plot. It offers heart interest, juvenile appeal, considerable pathos and a wealth of romance. It is sharply emphasized—there being "goodness and light" contrasted to shadows and sorrows. You may call it theatrical, but it is at all times interesting in spite of some overdrawn conventions. The director has been painstaking in his attention to the smallest detail. The interiors are well arranged, the lighting is satisfactory. The acting of Lowell Sherman is quite on a par with that of the star. It is a well-shaded performance.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

The emotional actress has a role which enables her to display her expressive personality as well as depth of talent. This man, unhappy over a selfish wife, has reached the depths of despair but through the kindly ministrations of the newspaper woman he is lifted to his rightful plane. The story treats dramatically of the power of love and offers interesting entertainment. Miss Young is assisted by a well known cast that includes William P. Carleton, Lowell Sherman, Dulcie Cooper and others.

PROGRAM READER

He was a powerful lawyer yet with all his influence he could not prevent his wife from being tried for theft. She was a shoplifter and selfish to a degree. Chagrined over his misfortune, the lawyer became a product of poverty. He had reached the depths of despair. When he could descend no further, the girl of his dreams entered his life again and lifted him to the plane of self-respect. He still was confronted by his selfish wife—who had spent a term in prison without being regenerated in character. How was he to get out of his dilemma? Come to the ———— theatre next ———— and see Clara Kimball Young in "What No Man Knows," a vital and genuine picture of life. It is rich dramatic entertainment and well acted by a well known cast.

"SKY HIGH"
(Fox)

This Mix Picture Is There With the Scenery and Action

THERE is probably no doubt that every exhibitor and patron thought that Tom Mix had reached the peak of his pictures—that having conquered the West from many variations the star was up against it for novel ideas. But Mix has shown in his latest release that he is a figure to be reckoned with—one reason being that he is ever in search for novel adventure. "Sky High" is well named. The Fox cowboy star is certainly up in the clouds here, for the backgrounds have been caught against the Grand Canyon. Mix has taken the entire company to the wonder spot of America and placed them on locations that are not only appealing to the eye, but magnificent places in which to enact a truly vivid Western.

If Fox has linked up any news reels with this feature they have done it in such a skillful manner that the scenes co-ordinate perfectly with the vital action. The star plays a government agent whose duty is to capture the smugglers of Chinese coolies and prevent the Orientals from crossing the border. Word reaches him that they are quartered in the Grand Canyon. And before you know it you are in for a pictorial treat which is positively amazing in its scenic scope. There is Mix cutting up some new stunts. You've never seen him scaling the cliffs of the canyon before. He has placed his horse out in pasture at times and trusts to his own steady feet here. The marvelous long shots—the collection of close-ups showing the immense rock formations or the deep cliffs and the other beautiful vistas—these are all in the picture. It is the most satisfying pictorial treat that has been offered in a photoplay in many moons.

It doesn't matter if the plot is rather conventional—that it is a variation on an old theme. Your eyes are feasting on other things. You see Mix capture the ringleaders and effect rescues of the girl whose father is the real culprit. You see him scale these cliffs in dexterous fashion. You see the heroine perched in a rocky cove far up the perpendicular wall. The Colorado River is far beneath and the eye drinks in the landscape and you admit to yourself—"that's fine!" A finale introduces some aeroplane views which present the bird's-eye shots. This machine figures in the story to some extent. But the plot is mainly a capture and rescue formula. Your crowd is going to like this one. They are going to sit on the edge of their seats and grip the arms of the chairs. For it carries one big thrill from beginning to end. Eva Novak as the heroine shows plenty of courage which enhances her vivid personality. Sid Jordan is a dependable bad man. Hats off to Lynn Reynolds and Ben Kline, the director and cameraman.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

An adventurous melodrama of the West, photographed amid the most marvelous backgrounds of the United States, namely The Grand Canyon of Arizona, and starring the popular Tom Mix, is "Sky High," which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— and ————. Mr. Mix plays a government agent whose duty is to prevent smuggling of Chinese labor into the United States. The operations are near the border and Newbury, the agent, discovers information that takes him to the Grand Canyon.

The young man has been attracted to Estelle Halloway, the daughter of the principal smuggler, but he allows no romantic tendencies to interfere with his work. He has occasion to rescue the girl from Bates, a henchman, and thereby earns her gratitude. The drama unfolds several tense moments before the culprits are brought to justice. The scenes give the star ample opportunity to flash his skill in the saddle as well as to perform the hazardous feats which he accomplishes so well.

PROGRAM READER

You have all been thrilled by Tom Mix in his daring exploits. You have followed his western features with undivided attention. You have experienced the deepest kind of suspense. But what you have experienced before will not hold a candle to the impressions you will feel after witnessing "Sky High," which we feel safe in saying to be the star's finest picture. Certainly no spectator will feel disappointed over the marvelous backgrounds which have been caught in the Grand Canyon. You will find this scenery extremely beautiful and stimulating. You will see Tom Mix employing one hazardous feat after another to give you a thrill. You will vote "Sky High" a picture of rich entertainment. Remember next ————.

SUGGESTIONS

You needn't have any worries about booking this feature. In the first place the star is a good bet and always draws. So play him up in your usual style. Then turn to the idea that he has his most picturesque Western here. Place stress upon the fact that the finest scenery which has ever been caught in a Western is presented here. Make mention that the Grand Canyon is revealed before your eyes in scenes which carry the breath away. Place emphasis that it is a vital and vivid Western which carries the usual Mix exploits of courage and that it always holds the attention. Mention that Eva Novak is the leading woman.

"THE NEW DISCIPLE"
(Federated Producers Service)

Capital Versus Labor Story Is Well Acted

THERE is some convincing argument offered in "The New Disciple" on the familiar capital versus labor formula. The picture is a dramatization of Arthur Nelson's book, which has been founded upon an interpretation of Woodrow Wilson's "The New Freedom." It is a picture which contains a deal of agitation for a new form of democracy—wherein an American plan of social equality will enable the wage earner to share in the earnings of the capitalist. It sort of vindicates Henry Ford's co-operative plan of making the worker satisfied by sharing in the profits. Mr. Wilson's plea is used as a foundation and excerpts from his book are employed in subtitles.

The picture carries several incidents which convince because the ideas are exploited in such logical fashion. Those who are looking for picturey entertainment may feel disappointed. "The New Disciple" does not pretend to acquaint the spectator with any form of orthodox drama. You can look upon it as subtle propaganda for a new relationship between capital and labor. And to make the argument effective the author has used for a background one of the mushroom towns which sprang up over night during the war. The "pay-triot" who presides over the plant has not reckoned with the high cost of living. He would do away with unions and force his employees to accept starvation wages. This figure has become immensely wealthy and his success has turned his head. In the plant is a young dreamer with Utopian ideas concerning the welfare of the workers. He exhorts and agitates, but also finds time to express romance for the capitalist's daughter.

These is a flash of romantic conflict engendered from the fight to win her love—the rival being a wealthy buyer for competitive interests. The action surges back and forth from the factory to the home of the profiteer with scenes interspersed detailing a meeting of the strikers and incidents touching upon the family life of the figures. Some will say that the picture is too talky—that it could be compressed into five reels. Perhaps they will be right, for the picture is not so much entertainment as it is illustrated argument. The director has staged the offering with realistic backgrounds—the factory life, the little details giving it a touch of reality. A capable cast that includes Pell Trenton as the young agitator, Walt Whitman as a foreman and Alfred Allen as the profiteer contributes sincere performances. Norris Johnson, who looks strangely like Margalo Gillmore, flashes real screen personality and talent as the heroine. Exhibitors in manufacturing towns will find it a good bet.—Length, 7 reels.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

John McPherson	Pell Trenton
Peter Fanning	Alfred Allen
Mary Fanning	Norris Johnson
Marion Fanning	Margaret Mann

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A dramatization of Arthur Nelson's "The New Disciple," which has been founded upon Woodrow Wilson's book, "The New Freedom," has been made for the screen and the picture will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ————. This production features the familiar conflict between capital and labor. It takes up the indictment by society of the profiteer. It presents logically and dramatically the new America which is finding itself since the war. It shows what was occurring during the profiteering days of the war. It shows men becoming millionaires over night and depicts a mushroom town emerging into a rich and busy manufacturing town. It also shows the great army of underpaid workmen—who in defiance of strike, but who are locked out and compelled to become socialists. It points out the benefits to be derived from the co-operative plan of employment—the profit-sharing scheme. "The New Disciple" is well constructed drama which furnishes a message. It is well staged and acted.

PROGRAM READERS

What is wrong with Capital? What is wrong with Labor? Is there anything wrong with these forces—which furnish the conflict throughout the world? What is the best manner in dealing with the forces of Labor? Are they underpaid? Should the capitalists take them into the co-operative scheme on a profit-sharing basis? Is it right to strike? Is anything gained by it? These questions are dramatically answered in the vital picture of the hour, "The New Disciple," which comes to the ———— theatre next ————. The story is written by Arthur Nelson with an interpretation of Woodrow Wilson's "The New Freedom." It is finely acted by a competent cast that includes Walt Whitman, Pell Trenton and Norris Johnson.

SUGGESTIONS

This is a capital versus labor story which is timely—which takes up the cause of labor and treats it logically and yet dramatically. You can mention that the author was inspired by Woodrow Wilson's vital book, "The New Freedom." Mention the competent cast, telling that it contains several talented and well known players such as Pell Trenton and Walt Whitman. If it is possible to get stills do so and display the beauty of Norris Johnson, who plays the heroine. For a prologue you can have several good readers recite behind portieres on the stage—their heads emerging through apertures. These readings can take up the substance of Life, Justice, Man, etc. Bill it as an absorbing drama which will command the strictest attention. Feature its vital theme.
